Survey says vets would serve

Vietnam era veterans ever conducted found a little over half said they would serve again if asked, but almost all said the United States should have stayed out of Vietnam. Among veterans who had served in Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Thailand or the South China Sea, 55 percent disagreed with the statement, "If I were asked to serve again, I would

Almost all the rest agreed with that statement to greater or lesser degree. Twenty percent said the statement matched their senliments "very closely," 10 percent said it matched "somewhat," 11 percent said it matched their feelings "not too closely" and 4 percent were unsure or did not answer.

Those findings emerged from a $484,000 survey conducted for the Veterans Administration by Louis Harris and Associates of 2,464 Vietnam era veterans, 510 educators and 1,000 business executives. The VA released the results Nearly three-fourths of the veterans said they were glad
