Rope method of learning: 'pain in the neck'

For those of you who are new to Penn State, there are, believe it or not, many ways to study.

However, studying, for those who care to partake in such deviant acts, can be rough — whether it be in the fall, winter, spring or even summer.

For Patty Carroll (10th-agronomy), Summer Term studying was simply impossible until one day she learned the rope method of learning. Yes, the rope method — not to be confused with the often forgotten rote method.

This wasn't your ordinary tie job, mind you. In typical Clint Eastwood fashion, Carroll made herself a noose and placed it around her neck. She tied off the end of the rope to the underbottom of the upper berth of her bunk bed.

"I knew I couldn't move at that point without choking," she said. "But, it was a real pain in the neck."

Reems turns up for encore appearance

If you have the chance take a look at the Undergraduate Student Government's 1980-81 calendar. If you are not familiar with USG's annual calendar it is outlined with captioned pictures of interesting things that happened last year at University Park.

It's an easy calendar to spot. It's the one with all-those-people-most-of-us-have-no-idea-who-they-are on the cover eating ice cream. Inside, you can see plenty of football and basketball pictures and shots of would be East Hall beachcombers and photos of people being foolish at the Phi Psi.

However, one picture USG decided to include was that of one of Spring Term's most provocative speakers — Harry Reems.

A quick explanation for those clean minded people out there, Reems is best noted for his participation in the production of such pornographic movies as Bel Ami and the all-time classic, Deep Throat. These movies — and many more with similar "scripts" — were shown by USG last year.

Remember USG did caption the pictures inside the calendar, but the student government probably didn't have to lament too long over this one before it came to a decision.

Reems' picture, of course, is captioned, "Life has its ups and downs."

A few good lines: In Edition's search

Don't can those humorous anecdotes dumped on you during the course of another academic year.

The Collegian is collecting them for In Edition, the Collegian's weekly humor column.

So, if a funny thing happens to you during your stay here at the University, please share them with the rest of the local populace by passing them along (via telephone or campus mail) to Andy Linker or Brian Garmann at The Daily Collegian, 126 Carnegie Building. The phone numbers are 865-1828 or 865-1820. Thanx.

Everything you read in In Edition is true. Really.

Read between the pulp: it's an import

Next time you're down at the bookstore (in between glimpses of Harry Reems and the ice cream eaters in the USG calendar), you might want to take a close look some of the Penn State stationery available. It's impressive.

You, too, can feel important when writing home to the parental units and other acquaintances using Penn State letterheads. Just think how impressed they will be when they see you are scribbling little notes to them on sheets embossed with "The Pennsylvania State University."

Yes, you, too, can be Penn State proud. Well, not really.

You see the stationery, if you look at its box closely, is made at Harvard. That's in Massachusetts.

Maybe the expression should be "We ARE Harvard?"

We who are about to register...

The crowds that gathered outside the Intramural Building for the first day of registration yesterday were lucky to have uncharacteristically nice weather.

Thousands of students must complete registration in two days and large lines are an all-too-frequent part of the process.
