

Booters should be proud despite no Final Four bid

The soccer team failed again in its quest for the National Collegiate Athletic Association championship. But the quarterfinal loss to Indiana Sunday must be placed in its proper perspective. Sure, the reward would have been a trip this weekend to sunny Florida, with its palm trees and oranges, for a second consecutive berth in the NCAA Final Four.

Rich Scarella

But losing to the Hoosiers didn't turn the Nittany Lions' 1980 season sour. The season was already sweetened by a 3-2 victory over previously unbeaten Philadelphia Textile in the NCAA Mid-Atlantic Region final.

"The loss there would have changed the success of the season somewhat," Penn State coach Walter Bahr said. "I'm sure it would have put the season in a different light."

The Lions shined on their own, though, by perhaps even surpassing the 1979 NCAA third-place team in overall ability and talent and by recording an 18-3-1 mark.

But that shouldn't be surprising since the Lions had nine returning lettermen. "We did a little bit better this season than we did last year," Bahr said. "This year would disprove any possible thought that we were a little lucky last year."

Led by All-American Jim Stamatis, the Lions shocked top-ranked Indiana last year in the quarterfinals, 2-0, at Jeffrey Field, and flew south where they got their wings clipped by Southern Illinois-Edwardsville in the semis.

Many skeptics thought Penn State's season was a fluke, like a rookie throwing a no-hitter in baseball. This time, however, the sophomore jinx whammed only Lion opponents.

The goal-scoring void left by Stamatis was a gap Penn State found difficult to narrow early in the season. And after falling 2-0 to the Hoosiers in the third game of the season, the gap could have been as wide as the Grand Canyon.

"We never overwhelmed anybody offensively," Bahr said, "but we controlled the large section of each game. We got goals, but from a lot of different people. That's because of the way we play. We got goals from midfield."

Placed by junior midfielder Duncan MacEwan, who led Penn State in scoring (10 goals, 13 assists), the Lions rebounded from that loss, a loss Bahr blamed on the Astroturf surface at Indiana, to win 14 of their next 15 contests.

Penn State legitimized its NCAA tournament berth even further by tying third-ranked Connecticut, 0-0, on the road and defeating Textile in the regional final. That set up another confrontation with the Hoosiers.

The match was tied at halftime, 1-1, but the Lions' hopes for some Florida sun and fun were drowned out by two second-half Indiana goals.

"If they bent us twice, I guess they're a better team than us," Bahr said. "I couldn't put my finger on the problem other than that Indiana was more aggressive. I'd rather give Indiana credit for leaving us rather than trying to find a reason for us losing the game."

A coach usually remembers teams by recalling their characteristics. The difference between the 1980 Penn State team and Bahr's other clubs is one trait atypical of the athletic stereotype.

"The team is made up of a lot of bright academic students," Bahr said, "and there's a relationship to the way they played. They didn't make many mistakes. They were very methodical."

"It was one of the few teams with enough talent and enough intelligence to play the type of soccer I prefer to coach."

It was also a team with enough consistency and enough teamwork to reach the Final Four, unlike the 1979 club which was dominated by Stamatis.

"The difference was balance," junior defender Dan Canter said. "We had 11 good players out there. We passed the ball better. I think we had a better team than last year and will be even better next year."

Call it a good season that came one game short.

Penn State's Jeff Matshofer (15) celebrates a goal with teammates Nigel Mnyati (7) and Pete Janjanski, but there was no celebrating for the Lions on Sunday after a 3-1 loss to Indiana in the NCAA quarterfinals.

Senior defender Kevin Scott's last chance at an NCAA Final Four berth fell one victory short despite Penn State's 18-3-1 record.

Astros ink Roberts; Winfield still unsigned

By The Associated Press

Dave Roberts became the highest paid utility baseball player ever yesterday when he agreed to a five-year deal worth an estimated $1.3 million with the Houston Astros.

Meanwhile in New York, San Diego Padre outfielder Dave Winfield is still being courted by both the Yankees and Mets, as well as two other clubs.

Roberts, a catcher-infielder with a 240 career batting average, struck rich in the free agent marketplace. Last season, he earned $65,000 with the Texas Rangers. His new contract with the Astros will bring him about four times that much in each of the next five years.

The Astros announced the contract as a $1.1 million deal, but it was learned from sources at the meetings that incentive clauses could add the remaining $200,000 to the package.

The deal was announced by Houston President and General Manager Al Rosen at the winter baseball meetings in Dallas. Rosen said Roberts' ability to play a number of positions made him a desirable player.

Seattle and Toronto were other finalists in the free agent bidding for Roberts, who was selected by 12 teams, more than any player in last month's re-entry draft. He batted .230 with 10 home runs and 30 runs batted in for Texas in 101 games last season.

Roberts was the fifth free agent signed during the meetings. The others were catcher Darrell Porter (St. Louis), pitchers Tug McGraw (Philadelphia) and Dan Spillner (Cleveland) and designated hitter Lee May (Kansas City).

The New York Yankees would like to add Winfield to that list, and yesterday the San Diego slugger and his agent said

George Steinbrenner's flair for controversy is not a negative factor in his deliberations on where he will play baseball next year.

The Atlanta Braves and Cleveland Indians also are in the Winfield sweepstakes as well as the Houston Astros, Frohman said.

The rebuilding Mets reportedly have offered a $12 million, eight-year package. Unofficial reports are that Steinbrenner and the Yankees are ready to trump that bid and raise.

Frohman admitted that the Mets still were solidly in the picture because of Winfield's affinity for the National League, where he has spent his entire major league career.

Winfield acknowledged that there were factors which might favor his remaining in the National League.

"I know the pitchers in the National League," said Winfield.
