PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philatelphia Phillies received their gold World Series rings before last night's home opener against the Pittsburgh Pirates and then went out and gave a giltedged performance.

The Phillies, behind Steve Carlton, lashed 11 hits as they beat the Pirates 5-1 before a crowd of 60,404. It was the first victory of the season for Carlton, the 1980 National League Cy Young Award win-

Carlton gave up nine hits, struck out five and walked one. He was in trouble in just one inning, the sixth, and got out of that when right fielder Lonnie Smith caught a fly ball and threw out Bill Madlock trying to advance to third for a double play.

Carlton, of course, has a policy of not talking to the media. He didn't change that last night, so manager Dallas Green and catcher Bob Boone played their usual roles as Carlton's designated speakers.

"When we get to talk about Lefty's (Carlton's) performances they all run together, they're all so good," said Green. "He shut down a Pirate team that can swing the bats. And when you do that, you're doing something."

"He threw very hard," said Boone. adding that Carlton's performance last night topped his throwing in Cincinnati last week where he wasn't involved in the decision

Phillies first basemen Pete Rose contributed two singles and a double and now needs just 66 more hits to pass Stan Musial for the all-time National League base-hit record.

The Phillies took a 3-0 lead in the second inning off loser John Candelaria. Manny Trillo walked to start the inning and, after Garry Maddox flied out, Larry Bowa doubled Trillo to third. Bob Boone singled Trillo home, with Bowa advancing to third. "Their format is men's athletics, whereas in women's athletics the trend is not really a team championship. I want to wait to see what to be growing. More programs are being established in women's athletics because the AIAW has a different they do with the format for women, but in the policy naking and governing it seems traditionally as though Portland is leary of women athletes suffering an identithey don't know the sport's parameters and are just neeting the numbers. They could care less." In fencing, Alphin said she expects that schools on the East Coast will remain AIAW, while West Coast schools will probably switch to NCAA. Aside from the lack of NCAA championships in some sports such as indoor track, NCAA recruiting regulations s another major concern among the coaches. The AIAW enforces a "hands off" policy in that coaches are extreme-v limited when it comes to the amount of contact they may ave with an athlete and her parents. The NCAA, however, gives coaches the freedom actively recruit athletes. "One of the disadvantages to going to the NCAA is that most of the recruiting rules are a result of football and ased on football and basketball. And everybody else has o live with that.

"With the AIAW, it's nice that those two sports aren't ecessarily involved in governing so much of our recruitig and some of our other rules. Rattray said the AIAW has a specific reason for using such strict recruiting regulations. "I feel that the women have their rationale for their recruiting rules, in that they were trying to take the pressure off high school athletes," she said. "I think they were trying to go along at a pace that would help women. "We (AIAW) are trying to evolve our own philosophie n rélation to women athletes and we (NCAA and AIAW) are not on parallel lines at this time; women don't fit nicely into an NCAA mold." Gymnastics coach Judi Avener. who is undecided on which structure she prefers until more information is available on the regulations and structure of the NCAA. in different directions, and that the women's progress was cut short as a result of the NCAA's decision.

"I feel that women's athletics have actually been quite different from what the NCAA is right now," Avener come up with a true merger.

NCAA, AIAW stands differ widely concerning recruiting said. "I feel that there is a very grave danger in the NCAA

"The big disadvantage would be getting swallowed up by the male organization," she said. "I am sorry to see that the AIAW did not work or was never accepted by our counterparts. I think there is a great possibility of losing our identity for a while."

In making their decision, the coaches will also have to weigh the advantages of the NCAA has to offer. The main advantage they cited was that the financial burden would be lifted from the athletic department because the NCAA said it will cover travel costs to championships for both men and women. "One hates to say dollars, but in relation to amateur sports one has to be realistic," Rattray said. "The NCAA basketball," Schwartz said, "and all our other rules are has the money backing them. They have the people with experience. Another advantage to the NCAA is that it will bring women's athletics further into the limelight. "I think it would make women's athletics. especially women's basketball, a little more credible," Portland said. "Everyone knows what the NCAA is and what it stands for, but not many people know the AIAW exists, no less what the initials stand for.

"The credibility would be the big thing that I would appreciate, and plus consistency in law enforcement. We don't have any full-time people in the AIAW so what is happening is there is not a consistency straight across the board on the way they handle things." Ultimately, though, the coaches agree that one governing structure is the best way to run men's and women's athletics. "From an administrative point of view, eventually it will be fantastic," Rattray said. "It would be very easy to also said she believes that the men and women are headed dissipate information and have a good system. And the one other advantage is obviously dollars.

"I know this is outrageous to say, but I would have preferred the NCAA to abandon and the AIAW to abandon robbed of a chance to naturally evolve into an organization and for us to come together. It would have been nice to
