Golf courses are ready for spring putters...

Rv LINDSAY NAYTHONS Daily Collegian Staff Writer You may never win the Masters, but that's no excuse not to take advantage of the University golf courses, now open and located just a golf ball's throw from Rec Hall.

Penn State has two 18-hole courses and a driving range. The White course is on the west side of North Atherton Street and the Blue course and driving range are located two miles west of North Atherton, off College Avenue. -The courses are open to the public. students and faculty members. education class. Course manager Earl Boal said the quality of the courses this spring came out a lot better than had been expected. Usually, snow covered courses are ideal because the snow keeps the sod protected from the cold wind, which can burn the grass.

"Although there wasn't much snow this winter, the courses came around. In fact, it's ideal for April," he said. Ken Reigle (3rd-civil engineering) said he likes the White course, but that the Blue course, because of its longer holes and narrower fairways, is more But golfers are not the only ones who take advantage of the rolling fairways and grassy knolls. Joggers also make their presence known. "It's great," said Don Hayduk (12thchemical engineering), who jogs on the four-mile trail on the perimeter of the courses three or four times a week. "Lots of people use this place," he

Although the jogging trail parallels many of the fairways and winds around some of the greens, Hayduk said he has never been hit by a stray, ball, which usually results from a slice or a hook.

Mark Seinfelt (3rd-English writing option), said the golf facilities "were terrific. It's really cheap compared to others I've played at. But sometimes; on nice days, it gets backed-up a
