8th Irish hunger striker dies

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) - IRA hunger striker Kieran Doherty died yesterday in the Maze prison on the 73rd day of his fast, Britain's Northern Ireland Office announced. He was the second Irish nationalist hunger striker to die in two days and the eighth in the fast that began at the Maze five months

Masked supporters of the Irish Republican Army hurled gasoline bombs and bricks at security forces in predominantly Roman Catholic West Belfast after news of Doherty's death spread, police said. Doherty, 25, had campaigned from his cell and was elected to the Irish Parliament in balloting last June.

British Army headquarters reported an armored personnel carrier was attacked and a 21-year-old soldier suffered wounds that required both legs to be amputated below the knees. It gave few details, but other reports said the vehicle was hit by a rocket-propelled

Police said a Catholic man suffered chest wounds from a grenade that was thrown at a police vehicle in Belfast's Ardoyne district. They reported policemen and soldiers fired plasic bullets to disperse rioters. Earlier yesterday, before Doherty died, two members of the Royal Ulster Constabulalry were killed when a landmine destroyed their squad car 60 miles west of Belfast. Two other RUC policemen in a second car were wounded and the assailants, believed to be members of the IRA's Provisional wing, escaped, officials said.
