

Talman brings PSU to Broadway

By MIKE HEIMOWITZ
Daily Collegian Staff Writer

They say I won't last too long, on Broadway. I'll catch a bus for home, that's what they all say. . . . But I won't quit 'til I'm a star, on Broadway. I won't quit 'til I'm a star, on Broadway. . . .

"On Broadway," by B. Mann, C. Weil, J. Lehrer and M. Stoller, Screen Gems-EMI Music Inc.)

The acting profession is probably one of the hardest fields for an aspiring artist to achieve success in, especially in the extremely competitive world of New York theatre.

Ann Talman, a 1979 University graduate, has gone further in two years than some actors and actresses go in a lifetime.

Talman is playing a major role on Broadway in Lillian Hellman's play, "The Little Foxes." The cast of "Little Foxes" also includes Elizabeth Taylor, Maureen Stapleton and Anthony Zerbe. The play itself has received rave reviews and has earned five Tony Award nominations.

While attending the University Talman did not even decide to major in theater until her junior year.

"My first two years I was in liberal arts and I dabbled in everything from Spanish to law to special education to speech pathology, but I was always in a show. I think I was in a show every term that I was at Penn State," she said.

Talman appeared in plays at the Festival Theatre, took classes and worked the morning shift at Mister Donut, punching in at 5:15 a.m.

In her last term, the summer of '79, Talman appeared in plays at the Festival Theatre, took classes and worked the morning shift at Mister Donut, punching in at 5:15 a.m.

"Threequency Opera" among other plays at the University. She also portrayed Cinderella at the Boal Barn Playhouse.

She decided on her major in the summer after her sophomore year.

"Before I returned for my junior year I was going to transfer to Carnegie Mellon, study music and become an opera singer. That summer, though, I thought a lot about it and decided I was not an opera singer," Talman said.

Because Carnegie-Mellon had accepted her for music and not for drama, she elected to return to Penn State and major in acting.

After reading two years of credits that did not really apply for theatre majors, Talman was forced to carry heavy credit loads in her remaining two years here.

"I had to make up for two years that I had to cram four years of drama into two years," she said.

"It was always busy. I usually carried 17 credits a term and I had to work pretty rough schedules. I wouldn't want to have to do it over again. It's easier here (in New York) than it was while I was at the University."

"I love it. It's a classic role. The character is the one character in the play who is decent and simple and always wants to know the truth," she said.

Educator advocates global perspective

By KAREN BAUSCH
Daily Collegian Staff Writer

American schools must begin to create a worldwide perspective in all subjects to help students deal with future global problems, the project director of global education for the state, Department of Education said yesterday.

Robert L. Schell, a senior social studies adviser for the State's Department of Education, said educators must change people's thoughts and perceptions about the world.

"We are playing ostrich; we must be an interactive part of the world," Schell said. "It is much easier to follow major league baseball (than try to change the educational teaching approach)."

Holding a world map above his head, Schell said most people view the world as a flat map, with the United States at its center. On a globe, however, the world has no central country, he said.

Lowering the barriers between countries through education will help children gain a greater global perspective, he said.

"Traditionally, nationalism is a powerful force in our country, nurtured by our geographical isolationism, and recently, through scientific, technological, political and business structures, our world has shrunk and brought us into an interactive and interdependent position with the rest of the world," Schell said.

The Pennsylvania Council of International Education, a newly developed group created to enlighten elementary and secondary school educators to the benefits of a worldwide perspective, gives Pennsylvania more opportunities than any other state to develop new educational programs, Schell said.

Using seminars and workshops, the council gives teachers means to integrate the idea of the United States as an interdependent country, not a single entity, into their curriculums, Schell said.

The discussion was sponsored by the College of Education and the local Phi Delta Kappa chapter.

Robert L. Schell, a representative of the state Department of Education, points to the globe as a symbol of an international approach to education.

Fire reported on campus

Charles R. Spicher, 563 Easterly Parkway, reported an electrical fire in the University's indoor tennis courts on Sunday. University Police Services said. The fire was out when Alpha Fire Company personnel arrived, police said.

Police said the extent of damages is unknown, and an investigation is continuing.

Michael Danahy, 305 S. Pugh St., told University police on Saturday that his bicycle was missing from the front of the Liberal Arts Tower. The bicycle is valued at $100, police said.

A woman told University police that an unidentified male exposed himself to her Sunday on Bigler Road near McCoy Natatorium. Police said the man was apprehended, identified and released to be questioned at a later date.

Sharon Timmel, 109 Hetzel St., told University police Sunday that a key missing from a locked equipment room in White Building. The value of the key is unknown, police said.
