bombs were lit around the fuselage and a 'bystander" called University Police Services. The 40 victims were aided by about 30 bystanders who had first aid training and acted as first respondents to the accident.

A Police Services car arrived and reported over the monitor, "An aircraft crash in Johnston Quad, East Halls. Dispatch all units.'' Soon afterward, more police arrived, followed by a University ambulance. Emergency Medical

They then extricated two people who were trapped in the aircraft by cutting away part of the fuselage. Around 8 p.m., the scene of the demonstration was beginning to calm down as the last and least serious victims were being transported in police cars to Ritenour. David J. Lindstrom, coordinator of Emergency Medical Services at the University, said, "It's gone real well. There are still a couple of rough edges. Until we have really practiced this, you do not know what is going to happen." AT&T will also be banned from entering the cable TV and burglar and smoke alarm businesses, although it can offer directory listings in electronic form. The primary issue before the Senate before yesteray's final vote was whether sufficient limits had been clamped on AT&T to prevent it from subsidizing its unregulated subsidiary.

Critics contended such requirements as separate books and employees were inadequate to prevent a firm the size of AT&T — the world's largest — from dominating any area it chose to enter.
