Storm dumps snow in eastern U.S.

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

A snowstorm driven by bone-chilling winds dumped up to 16 inches of snow from West Virginia to Vermont yesterday, closing schools in some areas, while icy roads were blamed for at least four traffic deaths.

Streets were generally snow-covered and treacherous from the Catskills and the upper Hudson River Valley westward through Pennsylvania and Ohio, but the storm missed areas of eastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island that were hit heavily by a blizzard over the weekend.

Meanwhile, pea soup fog shrouded the Los Angeles basin for the sixth day in a row and smog that had blanketed Phoenix, Ariz., all week began to clear.

Police blamed slick or snow-covered roads for highway deaths in East Homer, N.Y., Richmond, Mass., and Gilmanton Iron Works, N.H.

Police in Suffolk County, N.Y., reported 175 accidents since Tuesday morning as snow flurries left the Long Island county's streets and highways very slippery.

One Long Island man died in Selden, N.Y., when his car went out of control and slammed into a truck sanding the road.

In New Jersey, motorists had to cope with sharp and blustery winds. Trailers and motorcycles were banned on the entire length of the New Jersey Turnpike because of gusts reaching 40 mph.

The winds combined with temperatures in the 20s or low 30s to cause a wind chill factor of minus 10 degrees in parts of New York, the National Weather Serice said.

Gale warnings flew along Lake Erie, Lake Ontario and the Atlantic Seaboard from Maine to North Carolina.

Upstate New York suffered its first major snowstorm of the year, with the Albany area and the snowbelts near lakes Erie and Ontario the hardest hit.

Seven-year-old Debbie Faustini of North Weymouth, Mass., slides through the snow on a saucer near her home. Yesterday's storm missed Massachusetts and Rhode Island, but the areas were hit heavily by a blizzard over the weekend.

Near Albany, accumulations ranged from 5 to 8 inches. The village of Sherman near Lake Erie collected 16 inches of snow, while Sinclairville was hit by 11 inches of snow.

Classes for thousands of children had to be canceled in New York and Vermont.

Parts of Vermont received 8 inches to 10 inches of snow, adding to drifts left from a heavy weekend storm. Officials warned of hazardous sections of "black ice" on the state's highways.

No serious traffic problems were reported in New Hampshire, where about 4 inches of snow fell in the mountains and accumulations ranged from 1 inch to 3 inches in other sections.

Light snow fell over most of western Pennsylvania, western Maryland and West Virginia.

Maryland's two westernmost counties had accumulations of 2 inches to 5 inches. Heavier snow fell at higher elevations. The Snowshoe Ski Resort at Slaty, W.Va., reported 14 inches.

In the West, fog closed in on Los Angeles International Airport, forcing incoming flights to be diverted during the morning, while fresh breezes started to break up smog that put a brown tinge in the skies over Phoenix for six days.

Weather officials said the changing weather would clear the air by late today, but Phoenix hospitals reported a sharp increase in patients with respiratory problems.

Arkansas creationist trial enters third day

By BILL SIMMONS
Associated Press Writer

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Creationists consistently misstate and misapply a fundamental law of physics to support their contention that evolution cannot be true, a biophysicist said yesterday.

Harold Morowitz of Yale University testified during the third day of a trial of an American Civil Liberties Union lawsuit attacking an Arkansas law that says creation science and evolution must be given balanced treatment in public schools.

Morowitz and Harvard paleontologist Stephen Jay Gould were among numerous ACLU witnesses from science fields testifying that creationism is not scientific.

The law, the Balanced Treatment for Creation-Science and Evolution-Science Act, requires schools teaching evolution to give equal treatment to creationism, but provides no punishment for violations. While requiring equal treatment, it does not require that either creationism or evolution be taught.

Creation-science is the name given by the law to the view that the universe, the Earth and living things came into existence from nothingness 6,000 or so years ago. Creationists usually assign the act of creation to God, but the law forbids the use of religious writings or instruction in religion in teaching creation-science.

Evolution, the predominant view of scientists, maintains that life on Earth developed slowly over millions of years as a result of natural forces and that the universe has existed for billions of years.

The ACLU says the law violates the First Amendment prohibition against laws that establish religion. The lawsuit, filed for 23 plaintiffs, including 12 clergymen, also says the law is vague and violates academic freedom.

Morowitz testified about the Second Law of Thermodynamics, which says that physical systems isolated from outside sources of energy become increasingly disorganized and less complex.

Creationists say that argues against the development of Earth's present complex forms of life from simpler forms.

But Morowitz said the Earth is not an isolated system because it receives energy from the sun. That energy has fueled the development of complex life forms on Earth.

Gould said creationists close their eyes to fossil evidence of transitions between species. The extinct Archaeopteryx, for example, had the features of both reptiles and birds, Gould said, but creationists insist it was only a bird because it had wings and feathers. He said they ignore its reptilian features.

Gould agreed there are gaps in the record of evolution as preserved in fossils. Evolutionists cannot point to a series of fossils showing every change between one species and another, but there are fossils illustrating some of the changes, he said.

As an example, he said, fossils show relatively clearly that bones near the back of the reptilian jaw gradually changed into the bones of the inner ear of mammals.

The state contends creationism is supported by competent scientific evidence and argues that the ACLU is trying to shut out "those ideas with which they disagree because they are incompatible with their personal religious or philosophical views."

The trial has been nicknamed "Scopes II," after the 1925 "Monkey Trial" in which John Scopes was convicted of violating a Tennessee law against the teaching of evolution. The conviction was overturned on a technicality.

In later testimony, the supervisor of science in Little Rock schools, Dennis Glasgow, said the law's requirement that schools give balanced treatment to the two views is vague but must mean "equal emphasis and equal legitimacy." Teachers could not say one is scientifically untrue, said Glasgow, who opposes the law.
