Higher education is facing difficult times in the economic future because of proposed budget cuts in financial aid to gher education. However, the University will weather the storm and retain high quality, the dean of the College of Educaion told those of the 1.800 Winter Term graduates who attended commencement ceremonies Saturday.

Henry J. Hermanowicz said proposed financial aid cuts would amount to $89 million and affect 116,000 students in Pennsylvania alone

Other effects of the reductions include $2.4 million in student awards from the Guaranteed Student Loans and elimination of 600,000 graduate students from the GSL program.

"Such dramatic policy shifts are dreadfully short-sighted and a deliberate retreat from equal opportunity," he said. "I can't think of a better long-term investment than in schools, colleges and universities for cultivation of technical and creative abilities.' Hermanowicz told the graduates that although the University is large and diversified, it has not sacrificed quality. "I don't accept (the idea) that Penn State grew by trying to be too many things to too many people," he said.

The egalitarian quality of the University and its enthusiastic spirit as well as its comprehensiveness also makes the University an excellent school, Hermanowicz said.

"Despite financial cuts, Penn State must continue to attract able students." he said. "We must strengthen efforts in attracting minority students to the University.

Hermanowicz said the new graduates should take pride in joining 200,000 other University alumni

By ROSA EBERLY Collegian Staff Writer

The University Calendar Conversion Council's chairman will informally suggest that the University Faculty Senate institute more flexible procedures to facilitate the calendar conversion, the council decided at its Feb. 25 meeting. Originally, a recommendation on faculty senate flexibility had been proposed to the council by council Chairman James B. Bartoo. However, council members decided that an informal communication of concerns, rather than a formal document, would be better. The proposed document included the suggestion that the senate's automatic "hold" process in its Curricular Affairs committee be changed from 30 "The next 18 months will not be a normal time

The Calendar Conversion Council's communications committee decided at its Feb. 23 meetsing to form a subcommittee to work on a calendar conversion newsletter and transition handbook. The newsletter subcommittee will decide if the communications committee will publish a conversion newsletter for students and/or faculty members, said Arthur O. Lewis, communications committee chairman and associate dean of the College of The Liberal Arts.

Such a newsletter "should communicate and ease some of the anxieties students have about the semester calendar," said Chris Hopwood, president of the Undergraduate Student Government's Academic Assembly.

Hopwood said the University community needs some kind of communication other than The Daily Collegian. The Penn State Intercom and the University's Office of Public Information. However, Oscar C. tudents supervised, classroom preparations required, and class contact and class preparation workload under the semester system can be more hours reported," according to the report. Student credit hours — "showing classroom and individual instruction vield."

 Section credit value — "describing workload as the credit value of sections taught; measure of average class meeting size is also included," the report said. About 190 copies of the report have been distributed, James R. Dungan, special assistant to the director of the University's Office of Planning and Budget, secretary of the council Communication Committee, said. The report examined instructional workload over the last three years and will give a threeyear data base of workload under the term system, Dungan said

With this base, he said, changes in instructiona easily monitored

Richard D. Sheeder, senior resident and planning associate for the University, said similar information on instructional workload will be collected and displayed under the semester sys-

Dungan said the study is "not intended to establish a standard for instructional workload." The report "has the potential, if any individual decides to misuse it, to present a great deal of mischief within the University," Dungan said.

When asked by a council member what the report can be used for. Bartoo said, deans will find it useful to track instructional workload changes on a program by program basis.

Martha Adams, assistant dean for resident instruction for the College of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, said most agencies offering practicums to students in that college do not accept students for less than 10 to 14 weeks. And Spanier said that while students have four opportunities to take internships with the term system, the number of chances will be only two with semesters, unless the summer session can be Dungan said summer session registration flexibility is needed. He and University Registrar Warren R. Haffner agreed that the summer session registration problem is only a "technical problem" and can be solved.

Lewis said the committee's recommendation will advise the Calendar Conversion Council that summer session registration should be looked at The communications committee's second recommendation urged the council to make sure that the "summer session admission and transfer policy would maintain current quality."

John J. Cahir, professor of meteorology, said that if the council's original recommendations were followed, the College of Earth and Mineral in the fall and, in turn, would lower admission

"special cases" - students accepted to University Park with scholarships or in special programs Dungan said Cahir was referring to a statement in a report by the council's Standing Summer Session Committee — a report summarized into the Principal Recommendations on the Summer

The principal recommendations document is a summary and, where necessary, a clarification of the standing summer session committee report, Dungan said

"If they are in conflict . . . the principal recommendation document is the one that represents the opinion of the council." he said The original summer session committee report recommended that mandatory summer enrollment for freshmen be eliminated in the summer of 1984.

"The consensus was that that problem wasn't a workable idea." Dungan said. Cahir said the elimination of mandatory sur mer enrollment would result in higher numbers of less qualified freshmen entering University Park

are not on the council were concerned about parts has already been approved by the council and dations before they are approved by the council of the summer session recommendation. Among sent to Oswald, it is too late for problems to be and forwarded to Oswald and/or other University decision makers

Communicating the recommendations of the conversion council and getting feedback to the Leonard N. Zimmerman, a member of both the tee chairman and associate dean of the College of council are the communications committee's

The communications committee should "look at dations of the Calendar Conversion Council and make sure that the (recommendations) are understood by as great a number of the University community as possible," he said.

"As we find areas that are not clear to us, they should be sent back to the conversion council.

"The things that come out of that council, if we don't understand them, then there's a good chance that everyone else won't understand them, too," Lewis said.

The communications committee is more widely representative of the University community than the Calendar Conversion Council is, said James R. Dungan, committee secretary and special assistant to the director of the University's Office

Therefore, when discussing the council's re ommendations problems inherent to specific units of the University would be more readily uncovered by the communications committee than by the conversion council.
