

Lorenzo named coach of the year again

By LEE DUONIO
Collegian Sports Writer

Whoever said lightning never strikes twice didn't have heard wrestling coach Rich Lorenzo in mind. For the second consecutive year, Lorenzo has been named the Eastern Wrestling League coach of the year. Lorenzo earned the award by directing the Lions to a 12-3 dual-meet record, including the last 11 in a row and the EWL championship.

For the second consecutive year, head wrestling coach Rich Lorenzo was named the Eastern Wrestling League's coach of the year. He led the Lions to a 12-3 record this year, including wins in their last 11 meets, and the Eastern Wrestling League championship.

"It's quite an honor to receive the award," Lorenzo said. "I realize it basically goes to the coach whose team does the best. It's really won by the team. It would be appropriate to cut it up into 40 pieces, with the biggest piece going to (assistant coach) John Fritz." It often happens that after a coach is honored with such an award, the team turns around the very next year and falls flat on its face. But Lorenzo is not your typical coach.

The fact that this is the second time Lorenzo has been named Coach of the Year has not diminished the meaning of the award at all. "It's every bit as rewarding," he said. "Whenever you're recognized, it's an honor. I was sort of surprised. I thought the team that finished higher in the nationals, which was Bloomsburg, would win the award. But I think our performance in the EWL tournament was the difference."

2 more Final Fours: a first and a last?

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Two women's basketball teams will be crowned national champions this weekend, the NCAA's first ever and probably the AIAW's last. The Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women round of four begins at the Palestra here tonight with a doubleheader pitting Villanova, 28-3, against Rutgers, 23-7, in the first game and top-seeded Texas, 34-3, versus Wayland Baptist, 19-13, in the nightcap. The winners play tomorrow for the AIAW title.

Villanova women's athletic director Mary Anne Steenrod. "The fact that Texas, Rutgers and Villanova are in the Top 20, and have been all season, lends a great deal of credibility." Another reason, Steenrod said, is that "the AIAW was there to help women's programs when nobody else was. I felt we had to be loyal," she said, although she admitted, "I don't think CPR (cardiopulmonary resuscitation) could save it now."

The NCAA women's final also begins tonight in Norfolk, Va., with Chesney State and Maryland in the opener and Tennessee against Louisiana Tech following. Only three of the nation's Top 20 women's teams — No. 5 Texas, No. 8 Rutgers and No. 11 Villanova — opted to enter the AIAW tournament this year. That was not unexpected, since the AIAW will probably become sports history this spring.

"Then we realized we needed a parent group, and the AIAW was formed," Steenrod said. "Tiny Immaculate College in suburban Philadelphia, led by coach Kathy Rush, was the first three AIAW national basketball championships. Delta State, another fixture of the early tournaments, won three AIAW titles. Delta State lost this year in a quarterfinal game with Villanova.

Rutgers defeated Minnesota 83-75 in another regional at East Brunswick, N.J. Wayland beat California 85-70 at Berkeley, while Texas won its 31st in a row with 73-61 victory over Wisconsin in Austin. Sixteen teams were entered in the four regions. Texas coach Jody Conradt expects their game with Wayland to be "more like an intercollegiate scrimmage." The two teams have played four times this season, with Texas winning all four.

"What is most impressive about Lorenzo is the deep concern he has for his wrestlers. He not only teaches them about wrestling but about life in general. "I'm here as an educator, not just a wrestling coach," Lorenzo said. "Part of our goal is turning out quality young men. I'm here to help them reach their goals, whatever they may be. I get satisfaction out of seeing them achieve." As long as Rich Lorenzo is his coach, any Penn State wrestler is sure to be on the right road to success.

Who are the Quakers

Officially they are a "Society of Friends" who gather together in a quiet form of worship.
For 300 years they have tried to put their ideals into practice by:

- resisting wars & militarism
- reforming prisons
- seeking humane treatment of the mentally ill
- keeping free of creeds and clergymen
- trying to regard all people as brothers and equals!

A rose by any other name
Penn State gymnast Heidi Anderson is in a familiar position — signing autographs for admirers. These fans came armed with pen and paper after two weeks on the all-around title and the Lady Lions the team title in the NCAA women's Northeast regional championships two weeks ago at the University of Pittsburgh. This afternoon, in the NCAA national championships at the University of Utah, Anderson is one of the favorites to win the national all-around title. During the regular season, she beat all the other leading contenders. Anderson will also be defending her floor exercise championship as well. As a team, Penn State is seeded ninth in a field of 10.
