

Follies by design

By RON YEANY
Collegian Staff Writer

If there is one adjective that could describe the 1982 Film Follies, that adjective would be "unique."

Seniors in the graphic arts department combined their talents Saturday and in two performances presented their annual Film Follies in Walnut Building.

Each of the 29 presentations made a unique and imaginative statement, borne of and executed by its creator. Some were humorous, some were thought-provoking and others were just plain entertaining.

The presentations were developed around four categories:

- Metamorphosis — the change of one abstract shape into another.
- Leader — a film made of a scratched, dyed, bleached, or otherwise marked blank leader, accompanied by a soundtrack.
- Slide show — a passage of time in slide form with appropriate soundtrack.
- Film — a statement about a particular political, social, psychological or economic situation using an 8 or 16 millimeter camera.

The Follies began with Mark Stoner's "Lullaby of Broadway," a leader showing a dancing centipede. From then on, it was obvious the audience was in for a real treat. One after another, segment after segment, the Film Follies rolled on, leaving the audience wondering, "What will they think of next?"

Brian Garmern's "IHWY" — the "Big One" run backwards — made for an amusing and thoughtful piece. Everything from the women in the factories taking apart weapons to miners putting resources back into the ground was included.

Patti Byrne's slide presentation, "Through the Looking Glass," showed two mirrors in two rooms of mirrored image and the people that pass through the rooms and through the mirrors.

Betsy Valentine's "Train of Thought for a One Track Mind" was a captivating leader showing a train going through several maneuvers.

In "The Blues, the Blacks, and the Whites" by Jill McClary, black and white photographs of black and white people were set to a blues soundtrack.

"Mummy's Little Girl," a film by Joanne Hulse, scanned a beauty pageant winner from head to toe and back up again. The second time, however, she was wrapped in cellophane.

In "DUMB" Garmern took the musical introduction to "2001: A Space Odyssey," had non-musicians play it on trumpets, and added the resulting dreadful soundtrack to several appearances and disappearances of the word "dumb" on the screen.

Sandy Kitchen's "Nice To Meet You" began with people walking towards the camera at a very slow pace while the camera told them to have a nice day. As the pace of the people approaching the camera quickened, so did the camera's words.

These were just a few of the many excellent presentations viewed at the Follies. And though the show's creators, their fingers masquerading as elephant trunks in their elephant shaped invitations, were scared away at the end by a little white mouse, the Film Follies didn't scare anyone away.

In a very relaxed atmosphere, those 18 talented graphic arts students transformed a simple movie screen into 75 minutes of the most unique and entertaining kind of art imaginable.
