

Stills and Moffett present a political 'Call To Action'

By CHRIS STAMBOULIS
Collegian Staff Writer

Penn State's last night were treated to an informal presentation that put to question some of the major problems the world is facing.

Stephen Stills, formerly of Crosby, Stills Nash, and Young, along with Toby Moffett, former Connecticut congressman, were at the University to urge students to get involved in today's political system.

In "A Call To Action," sponsored by Colloquy in Eisenhower Auditorium, both said that students should voice their opinions and take the initiative to inform politicians of what is on the public's mind.

"As a public official I found that a politician did respond to pressure, but only pressure from one source (government)," Moffett said.

He added that freeze groups, environmental groups and other citizen organizations need help from students to supply their own pressure.

Moffett used the current activism of West Germany's Green Party as a model.

"We could actually have a 14-mile chain of people or get a quarter of a million people in a city square, like they have done," he said. The United States even has more of a grass roots organization, he added.

Moffett attributes the difference between Germans and Americans to the ease Americans have with obtaining what they want. He said that all Americans have to do today is push a button for pretty much anything.

Referring to the recent win of democrat Chicago Mayor-elect Harold Washington, Stills said, "Will it take a race issue to get you to vote?"

With the use of favored Stills' songs such as "Wasted on the Way," "Love the One You With," and "Teach Your Children Well," he and Moffett raised other issues that have been on the minds of

'Will it take a race issue to get you to vote?'

—Stephen Stills

Stills said he grew up in Costa Rica with a loose government and the sight of machine guns. The machine guns he grew up with are still there.

"Most Americans think of (Central and South American countries) as 'Banana Republics,'" Stills said, adding that American foreign policy toward these countries is like "Victorian policy."

The use of the U.S. government's $2 trillion defense budget, including nuclear weaponry and power were also discussed.

Moffett said, "The question we have to ask ourselves is whether we should let things go the way they are or ask if there is safety in negotiating," adding "do you want your children and grandchildren living in a world like this?"

He said he was told by one American general that negotiating with the Soviet Union should not take place. "Its absolute madness," Moffett said.

Concerning nuclear power, Stills said there were other sources available to the public, such as fusion power.

Several nuclear plants were spoken of such as Diablo Canyon, Calif. Moffett said the authorities attributed the delays in the plant's opening to picketing, but said actually the plant and its surrounding area was unstable. Moffett added it had been built incorrectly and that there were frequent earthquakes in the vicinity.

Group proposed to evaluate USG

By CHRISTINE KAY
Collegian Staff Writer

The Undergraduate Student Government's Academic Assembly proposed that the USG Executive Council incorporate a task force of concerned students, faculty and/or administrators to evaluate USG, to report on its findings and to suggest changes needed in USG.

At last night's assembly meeting, Steve Lunger, president of Liberal Arts Student Council, submitted the proposal so that the task force's evaluations and proposed changes in USG will "make USG more representative of Penn State" in the future.

"I think the major concern is that USG doesn't command any respect from the University," Lunger said.

Chris Hopwood, president of Academic Assembly, thinks that there is a major problem with student apathy, but said it "has to start with the student government to help students change their attitudes toward being apathetic."

"Students don't have resources, student government does, he said. "When students look at USG, they don't see it being organized enough."

Lunger said: "Maybe now is the prime time to look at the structure of USG, to see if we want to continue with it in the '80s under a new administration and based on a new calendar system."

The task force may change some things within USG, even if it doesn't change the structure of USG, Hopwood said.

Also at the meeting, the assembly discussed commencement for Fall Semester 1983. A proposal is being prepared to present to the administration concerning the need for a Fall Semester commencement, Hopwood said.

"Whether or not there is a need for a ceremony or there is a student desire to have a fall commencement must be examined by the administration," he said.

Several members of the assembly believe that a ceremony should take place for Fall Semester 1983.

"Penn State has four terms of commencement now and each is filled, so you cannot say that they won't be filled for a Fall Semester commencement," Hopwood said.

Phil Candreva, Earth and Mineral Science Student Council representative, said: "The administration claims that other universities on a semester calendar do not have fall commencement, but they also don't have 40,000 students."

In other business, Hopwood spoke about PS-23, which is a policy regarding student input into faculty evaluation.

A joint faculty/administrative commission to review and make recommendations on PS-23 was established after the measure was vetoed by University President John W. Oswald in February.

"It is very important to increase student awareness of the need to evaluate faculty members," Hopwood said.
