14—The Daily Collegian Thursday, April 21, 1983 Basketball needs a fair shake

In media coverage and fan interest, major league paseball dominates professional basketball. Be it October or April, Bowie Kuhn's game overshadows Larry O'Brien's on the sports page and in television exposure.

* Basketball doesn't even get a chance to capture the nation's attention. Baseball smothers the NBA season from the first opening tipoff in October to the last desperation shot in May.

When the basketball training camps open in September, baseball's pennant races start to heat up. When the NBA regular season is ready to begin in mid-October, it's World Series time.

- From November to February, which used to be basketball's chance to capture the sport scene with only hockey to compete with, the major league came up with new ploys to keep America's pastime in the papers — free agent signings, arbitration and those ever popular winter meetings in some tropical paradise.

In March, when NBA clubs are fighting for playoff berths, stories of spring training openings and pictures of Fernando Valenzuela "stretching out the winter kinks" infiltrate the climax of the NBA's season. Forget the playoffs. It's time for opening day and all the "excitement" of seeing new faces in new places. It's time for the Blue Jays or Cubs to get a chance to sit atop the standings until the real teams start to play up to their potential. Meanwhile, the best basketball being played on the face of the earth must take a back seat. I think it's time sports editors and television news editors gave the 'NBA a fair shake. I agree the regular season does have its dull moments that need not be reported heavily. But the playoffs showcase the best individual efforts along with the best team play neccessary to win a championship. Baseball will go unopposed from July to September, when their season hits the television and deserves top billing, but for now it should be caddying for basketball instead of the other way

At the collegiate level, Penn State basketball must also sit in the huge shadow of "Joepa" and the football Nittany Lions. Some have noted that football has placed itself there for a few more years with the naming of Bruce Parkhill as the program's new coach.

Fans expected Penn State to go the "name coach route" and go after Lute Olson or George Raveling. Well they did that five years ago when they brought Dick Harter back east from Oregon. Obviously it didn't work out. Sure they had winning seasons. But the players were unhappy and you didn't see smile much either. Harte

With the naming of Parkhill, Penn State has a coach who will fit into the program rather than be the program. The basketball roster is not blessed with the best talent in the East, but the players are capable of making a post-season tournament under the right guidance.

Harter tried to mold the team into his image of how a team should play regardless of what his team's limitations were. Parkhill, realizing that Penn State does not have a dazzling individual performer, plans to mold his team based on what his individuals can do best. Next year's team will be a small, but quick team. With the departure of Mike Lang, the Lions lose their only bulk under the boards so rebounding will be a problem. This will call for an offense that will yield a high percentage shot each time down the court. The running game will come because of the team

234-7465

speed and the press will be neccessary in order to keep the opposition from setting up their offense and exploiting the size and strength advantages most teams will have against Penn State. Parkhill has already said he will feature this type of play next season, which should make fans realize that the man will try to do whatever is necessary for the team to receive a post-season tournament spot. He has already built up one program at William and Mary and if he keeps his enthusiasm and optimism at the same level he had at last week's press conference, he should do a similar job at Penn State.

Back to baseball, a statistician's delight. Baseball offers figures in almost every concievable catagory. Looking over the official final figures for the National and American Leagues, I noticed a curious distinction. For some reason, the NL uses full first names while the AL is content with using the shorter versions of first names and nicknames.

For example, last years NL batting champ was Albert Oliver. The Dodgers' Johnnie Baker was 8th on the hitting charts while W. McKinley (Max) Venable batted a lowly .224. Jeron Royster and Terrance Kennedy each hit .295. Frank McGraw did not record a save while W. Timothy Lollar compiled a 3.13 ERA.

The AL lists amongs its stats Bobby's, Willie's, Tommy's, one Bucky, one Moose, and one Tippy. No wonder the Nationals have won the last three World Series and the last umpteen all-star games. they just take the game more seriously.

Ending with a basketball note, out of all the literary excellance that graces the walls of Pattee Library lavatories, this saying is the most frequently found (other then sexual preferance ditties) and probably the most true: Nobody, but nobody, deserves more than Moses Malone.

tion's most heavily recruited high many schools." school basketball players, an- The UNC coach said he plans to the North Carolina Tar Heels. Popson, a 6-10. 195-pound center from Bishop O'Reilly High School here, said at a news conference that he decided last night between UNC and Notre Dame, his final two choices from an original field of 150 schools. A three-time Associated Press All-State selection and member of several prep All-America teams, Popson said he chose North Carolina because he had always wanted to play at the Atlantic Coast Conference school. He said he was also pleased at
