

Fall Semester schedules waiting in the bookstore

By ANN MATTURRO
Collegian Staff Writer

"It's really here. The Fall Semester schedule of courses is on sale at the Penn State Bookstore on campus so students can begin planning their futures under the semester system. A spokeswoman from the bookstore said they started with about 17,000 course schedules. The schedules cost 50 cents, a 10-cent increase from the term schedules. Chris Hopwood, president of the Undergraduate Student Government's Academic Advising, said the Fall Semester schedule of course will probably jolt some students. "The course schedule will probably have a psychological effect on students as they schedule seven classes to get their minimum of 13 credits instead of the normal four or five," Hopwood said. Several department heads said they could not comment on the content of the schedules because they have not yet seen them. Carol Stewart (13th-general arts and sciences) is a student adviser for 14 freshmen in the College of The Liberal Arts. She said she has not received many reactions from students so far but anticipates many of her advisees to begin panicking soon.

Small, relaxed crowd shares a revival of Gentle Thursday

Balloon monsters floating in the wind, Frisbees buzzing around, and people just relaxing in the sun could be seen yesterday on the HUB lawn as they celebrated a revival of Gentle Thursday. In an effort to offer students a day to reflect on life, Friends of Gentle Thursday revived the event to emphasize the importance of sharing. However, yesterday's event only attracted a small crowd. John LaFemina, president of the group, attributed yesterday's low turnout to the cool weather. "To entertain students, the Friends of Gentle Thursday provided balloons, bubbles and paint for coloring faces. Don Cameron (8th-general arts and science) said he attended the event on the HUB lawn because "it sounded like a good time." Jordan Waring (4th-liberal arts) said he likes the idea of Gentle Thursday and thinks similar events should be held more often. "I think they should have something like this every week because people don't do anything during the week," Waring said. Waring added that the event should include bands, which would not only attract more people but make the day more enjoyable. However, LaFemina said: "Bands are the root of all the problems." Gentle Thursday, an annual event in the past, was canceled by the University in 1980 because University year instead of just 10 weeks of it," Wright said. Wright plans to meet with his 25 student advisers because he wants to "make sure they're all following the correct and common policy."

While students should follow many of the same scheduling procedures they now follow, the new coursebooks include a scheduling change for physical education courses. Sandy Herriman, University secretary in the College of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, said the physical education department will no longer internally handle the scheduling of the second half of the physical education credit. Under the semester system, students will have the option of scheduling Physical Education 5, a 15-week gym course for 1 credit, or two physical education courses, Physical Education 6 and 7. Physical Education 6 will meet for the first seven and one half weeks and Physical Education 7 will meet for the second seven and one half weeks. Each class is worth one half of a credit. "If students want to take two gym courses, they must register for Physical Education 6 and 7," Herriman said. "Students can't register for Physical Education 6 without registering for Physical Education 7." The schedule number will differentiate among physical education courses, such as Scuba Diving and Ballroom Dance, under the 5, 6 and 7 course headings.

Summer credits can be earned away, but PSU policies apply

Students who plan to forsake employment or relaxation this summer and attend classes at another college should be aware of University policies if they want their summer studies to be recorded. If students plan to attend another college or university during the summer, they must submit a copy of the institution's course schedule book to the Office of Undergraduate Admissions in 201 Shields. The schedule book must be reviewed by a transfer admissions counselor to determine if the credits a student wants to take will transfer to the University, said Nancy K. Gardner, associate director of undergraduate admissions. If the credits will transfer, the transfer admissions counselor will give the student a form to be submitted to the student's academic adviser who will determine how the credits can be applied to the student's area of study. According to a prepared statement, when the summer course is completed, the other institution must send an official transcript to the Office of Admissions. Credit for classes taken at other institutions will only be given if students receive a grade of C or higher, Gardner said. "There's always been a lot of student interest in summer courses," she said. "We get hundreds of inquiries every year around this time." About 400 or 500 University students take courses at other institutions during the summer. Technically, students are not limited to the number of credits they can take, but "a (University Faculty Senate) policy states that students must take 25 of their last 60 credits at Penn State," Gardner said. Kathy Tressler, a University secretary, said students do not have to meet any type of deadline to take classes at another institution during the summer. However, before students leave at the end of the term they should let the admissions office know what institution they plan to attend. Also, several summer courses are offered at Penn State's Commonwealth campuses as part of the University's Continuing Education Program, Gardner said. "If a student is interested in attending a branch campus, he should contact that campus," Gardner said. "There isn't as much paperwork involved because branch campuses are part of Penn State."
