Aubut said overtime was important for the fans. "The main point of the motion was that this is the fans' wish; they're the kings — they pay the players' salaries and they pay our salaries," said Aubut, who had lobbied vigorously for the proposal. "The essence of sport is to have a winner and a loser."

Ziegler said the governors spent most of the fourhour meeting discussing the legal tangle surrounding the St. Louis Blues, the league's ownerless franchise. He declined to comment on what was discussed but said the board will meet again on July 21 to examine
