

24-hour on-campus parking possible

By ALICE RUDOLPH
Collegian Staff Writer

On-campus 24-hour parking may be available to off-campus students beginning next week, the director of the University's residential life program said yesterday.

M. Lee Upercraft said his office has been closely monitoring the parking situation on a daily basis, and enough room exists to possibly issue approximately 150 permits on a first-come, first-served basis.

However, he said, it would only be a short-range solution to parking problems that exist for the off-campus student.

Upercraft suggested that for a long-term solution, the University and the community of State College must work together. The community should be aware that off-campus storage is needed for student vehicles, he said.

Also, a new University committee has been formed to study the parking situation on campus. Its function is to see if additional parking could be created on campus, Upercraft said.

However, he stressed that this committee is only proposing ideas, because any formal decisions would have to be approved by the University's Board of Trustees.

"Where would the money come from?" he added. Peter Cutrone, president of the Organization for Town Independent Students, and Dave Labuskes, president of the Association of Residence Hall Students, have been invited to be members of the committee.

Upercraft said the original decision prohibiting 24-hour parking on campus for off-campus students was made because the University Parking Office's primary responsibility was to the on-campus student, who would be storing a car, and to the commuting student, who drives his or her car to campus daily.

"Probably where we made a mistake was by not making it well-known that parking wouldn't be available on a 24-hour basis (to the off-campus student)," Upercraft said.

Solicitation policy is found unconstitutional

By GAIL JOHNSON

A federal court has issued a final ruling declaring the University's regulations for solicitation in University residence halls unconstitutional.

Prior to the time of the lawsuit, the University's policy on solicitation in residence halls stated that a commercial group could demonstrate products in a common area of a residence hall. The corporation was required to register with the Residential Life Office.

invited. However, it can no longer demonstrate in common areas of the dorms.

In the initial lawsuit, the district court ruled in favor of the University. Following this decision, AFS applied for a preliminary injunction, but district court again ruled against the corporation.

AFS appealed the case and the appeals court reversed the decision in its favor. Last December, the district court handed down a temporary injunction against the University.

University officials have decided to appeal the court's decision, said Jennifer Gould, vice president of the Association of Residence Hall Students.

Based on the court's decision, the University policy — as it now stands — is unconstitutional and is therefore not binding. Under the permanent injunction, AFS or any commercial group can enter a student's room and demonstrate their products, as long as the student invites the representative into the room.

The company could not solicit any sales unless invited into a student's room to sell on a one-to-one basis.

The University's policy, which was changed last year, still allows commercial groups to solicit sales on a one-to-one basis in a student's room if

Sailing course to grant skipper status to novices

For those adventurous souls who crave the excitement and adventure of the high seas, but find themselves helplessly landlocked in Happy Valley, here is in sight.

The University will offer two public sailing courses at Stone Valley Recreation Area this fall.

The first course will meet from 9 to 11 Saturday mornings, beginning tomorrow and continuing until Oct. 22. The course, which costs $35, will lead to a Stone Valley Skipper's Card, said Phil Keller, program supervisor at Stone Valley.

The second course will meet from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Sundays, beginning Sept. 4 and continuing through Oct. 16. The cost will be $50, and the course will lead to basic Red Cross sailing certification, he said.

Participants receive instruction on assembling, positioning and handling a sailboat in both normal and poor weather conditions. Also, they learn basic racing rules, Keller said.

The courses conclude with written and practical tests in which the participant must assemble a boat and sail it, said Keller.

No previous experience is necessary to take the sailing course. "We assume that the person knows nothing about sailing," Keller said.

However, to register for either class, participants must be at least 15 years old and pass a swimming test, which includes swimming 50 yards fully clothed and treading water for 10 minutes, said Bonnie Hall, secretary at Rec Hall.

Double standards, jealousy hinder women professionals' progress

By NAN CRYSTAL ARENS

Mimi Unger Coppersmith, a member of University Board of Trustees, yesterday told members of the Woman's Alliance that women are not doing enough for each other in their fight for equality.

Coppersmith, also president of Barash Advertising and Morgan Signs, said some of the problems faced by women in the business world stem more from professional jealousy among women than from jealousy between men and women.

"The opportunities of women are hindered by men setting separate standards, but the opportunities of women are also hindered by women," she said.

When a professional woman encounters another, they will often try very discreetly to "trip one another up," she said.

"We have to be so much better than our male counterparts because a separate set of rules exist for judging men and women on the professional level," she said.

Coppersmith stressed the importance of women becoming involved with the issues that affect their lives.

"Don't wait to shake yourself and come alive as a woman, because you can't get anything done until you do," she said.

Coppersmith said the untimely death of her husband, Sy Barash, was one of the greatest tragedies of her life, but it also made her come alive as a woman because she had to deal with herself for the first time.

Underscoring the need for women to become involved in decision-making, Coppersmith encouraged active support of women political candidates.

"Only 3.4 percent of the people making decisions about your and my lives are women," she said.

"I have had the opportunity to be in a lot of influential places. I could have taken my knitting and been a nice 'lady'... but I would rather use that power and wedge to get things done for you," she said.

Speaking on the issue of equal pay and respect for equal work, she said women "cop-out" and do not support each other enough.

"It is appalling that we aren't any further along than we are," Coppersmith said.

Women have to worry about their job security and therefore are reluctant to make waves concerning issues like equal pay, she said.

"We must more frequently... deal with the heart of the subject," she added.

"We have to go through the system just like everyone else, and the system is a little more tough for us than for any male you know," Coppersmith said.
