Program to outline job search skills

Job search skills will be the topic of a Colloquy-sponsored program at 7 tonight in the HUB main lounge. Speakers will include Anne Wuesthoff, personnel manager for Quaker Oats; John Feigal, associate employee relations representative for Marathon Oil Company; and Jeff Garis, University career development and placement counselor.

Wuesthoff, a University graduate in communication studies, will relate her experiences in looking for a job, Garis said, and describe her encounters she faces as an employer.

Feigal will talk about hiring decisions at Marathon Oil Company, Garis said.

In addition, both Feigal and Wuesthoff will discuss career opportunities in their companies, Garis said.

Garis said he will discuss the job search process in general and how students can develop their career throughout college. Also, he will discuss some of the services offered by the University's career development and placement center, he said.

WPSX:

University events to be broadcast live soon

By SUSAN GRAFFIUS
Collegian Staff Writer

Live telecasts from Rec Hall, Eisenhower Auditorium, and the Playhouse and Pavilion theatres soon will be possible when WPSX, the University's television station, completes installation of fiber optic lines.

Carl Fisher, electrical designer at the University, and chief engineer in charge of the project, said the fiber optic lines being installed are silicon cables smaller in diameter than a hair.

"There is one transmitter and receiver in each location," Fisher said. "A portable unit (of a transmitter and a receiver) is taken to each of the outlying buildings so that (the station) can send out and receive transmissions at the same time."

Light-emitting diodes, which work on the same principle as digital watches, send encoded pictures and sounds by infrared light back to the receiver. They are decoded and turned back into picture and sound waves that are then broadcast live into the home.

"This entire process is almost instantaneous," Fisher said.

Fisher also said that for the past four years WPSX has been a leader in the steadily growing fiber optics field.

The station has had a fiber optic hookup between Wagner and Mitchell buildings for the past two years. The installation of four additional units is welcomed by the station because fiber optic lines are more efficient than conventional copper wire lines in several ways.

One advantage is their size: "The new fiber optic lines are very tiny and take up less space," Fisher said.

Because they can be installed through pre-existing conduits (tubes or channels which protect electrical lines), installation costs are reduced, he said.

In addition, the fiber optic lines are better quality than the copper ones.

"The fiber optic lines are less subject to interference than copper lines because light waves are used instead of sound waves," Fisher said.

He added that the cost of the fiber optic lines is comparable to the cost of copper wires but the performance of the fiber is much better.

"The total cost of the entire project will be about $2,000 to $3,000," said Marlowe Froke, general manager of Learning and Telecommunications Services. The project is being funded through contract grants and service charges, Froke said.

The link with Eisenhower Auditorium was completed during the third week of October, while the other connections are not expected to be finished until later this month, Fisher said.

The first use of the Eisenhower Auditorium connection is scheduled for Saturday when "Bandarama," a concert by the Penn State Blue Band, is to be broadcast.

"(The new hookups) will open up coverage of University events," said Jean Boyd, programming head at WPSX Television.

Gymnastics, wrestling, volleyball and basketball are tentatively scheduled to be broadcast live from Rec Hall in January. Schedules may be picked up at 201 Wagner. WPSX also plans to offer theatrical productions and other events.

Boyd said through the airing of additional athletic, theatrical and social events, "WPSX is looking to attract an audience which may not be watching now."

"Students have the advantage of attending the events on campus. With the additional program, (the station) hopes to expand the audience to those who would not otherwise watch them," Boyd said.

"Similar to the airing of the football games, (WPSX) will expand the audience where tickets are sold out and people would not be able to go," she said.
