Lab testing may hurt animals

By BRUCE L. CARY Collegian Staff Writer

A nationally-known animal rights advocate Monday said subjecting laboratory animals to painful test experiments is unethical even if the research provides valuable results. "It's unethical to administer tests to animals who so is to gain a purely theoretical knowledge of how something may effect us," said Donald Barnes, director of the National Anti-Vivsection Institute. Barnes, speaking at the HUB main lounge during a Prison officals give escapees free ride FORT PILLOW, Tenn. — A murderer and an She said the inmates had changed out of their officials last week when Sylvester Alexander, the last of the five escapees to be recaptured, was Alexander, serving 40 years for armed robbery, told authorities he and Randolph Oliver, serving life for murder and rape, were walking along a highway east of the prison when a prison truck stopped.

Summers, who has ordered an investigation of prison security, said the three men in the truck gave the escapees a ride for several miles. The other escapees were Ronald Lewis Freeman, a convicted murderer serving 198 years; James Clegg, a convicted habitual criminal serving a life sentence; and Riley Arzeneaux, serving 40 years for second-degree murder.
