Assembly can explain registration

Students with questions concerning computerized registration can turn to the Undergraduate Student Government's Academic Assembly for help, Assembly President Frank Pogue said yesterday.

The assembly staff is trained to answer questions about Academic Information Systems, final examinations and possible violations of final examination policy, he said.

"This is where the emphasis is going to be for the rest of the year with the people staffed at the desk," Pogue said.

He said his staff is prepared to answer questions about alternate and priority courses, the process of registration and the date students will receive their registration forms. Also, staff members can tell students how to change schedules and drop or add courses.

Scuba divers make splash in Nittany Diver class

The underwater world is a fascinating and intriguing one. Scuba diving has given many the opportunity to explore this dark world. However, before embarking safely on such an expedition, one must first be certified in basic scuba.

Last weekend a basic scuba class from Nittany Divers completed the final requirement of its course: an open water dive at Willows Springs Diving Club in Richland.

The course was conducted under the auspices of National Association of Underwater Instructors (NAUI) members Bill "Rudy" Richardson, Maryann and King Farrington.

All pool sessions were preceded by classroom lectures. The lectures covered such topics as decompression tables, accident procedures and hazardous marine life.

On Saturday morning, class members packed their gear and headed for an overnight stay at Willows Springs.
