

Slaney, Budd set to meet again

By ANDREW WARSHAW
AP Sports Writer

LONDON — Tears and acrimony have given way to conciliatory words and gestures.

The soothing effect of a year's passing has mended the stinging pain of Los Angeles.

Zola Budd and Mary Slaney will race together July 20, the first time since they tangled in the now-famous 3,000-meter women's final at the 1984 Summer Olympics.

"It will be a marvelous evening for me," said Budd.

"I bear Zola no animosity," said Slaney.

Billed as an "Olympics rematch," the race is the main attraction of a star-studded Grand Prix meet at London's Crystal Palace stadium.

Romania's Marica Pulca, the Olympic 3,000 winner, was invited to participate in the long-awaited showdown, but was withdrawn by her national federation last week.

Turning her back on Britain, she decided to run domestically again, risking running afoul of the international boycott of South Africa's apartheid policies.

British track officials, aware that Budd faced a worldwide ban, managed to change her mind just 48 hours before she was due to compete.

Curiously, during a U.S. television interview last week in Seattle, Budd said she had deliberately slowed down after colliding with Slaney for fear of being booted even more harshly if she had won.

"I didn't want to stand on the winner's rostrum. I think the people would have booed again. So I ran slower, not to get a medal," she said. "Maybe it would have been better if I had stopped."

Slaney, who lives in Eugene, Ore., said the groin and hip injuries she sustained in the Games prevented her from working out for nearly two months.

Slaney plays down significance

LONDON (AP) — America's Mary Decker Slaney and her new coach, Luiz Oliveira, are playing down the significance of Saturday's eagerly awaited clash with Britain's Zola Budd.

Slaney and Budd will race over 3,000 meters at a Grand Prix meet at London's Crystal Palace stadium for the first time since their collision at the Los Angeles Olympic Games.

The now famous clash of legs in the 3,000 at the Los Angeles Coliseum left the medal hopes of both runners in tatters. Slaney lay writhing in agony on the side of the track, while Budd's concentration snapped and she finished disappointingly in seventh place amid boos from the pro-American crowd.

The bitter recriminations that followed made a rematch a thrilling prospect. But in the weekly British entertainment magazine, TV Times, published yesterday, Slaney said:

"I will be happy to run against Zola again but as far as I'm concerned she is now just another runner. The best situation is if it's just another race, if we both just happen to be there."

"When people look back at the 1984 Olympics, they will think about Carl Lewis, about Ed Moses and what happened to Mary." Of course it bothers me. I wanted to win but it isn't a great tragedy. It's behind me now."

Oliveira said the Slaney-Budd confrontation had been unfairly built up by the media.

"Zola is a good runner, a good kid," he told TV Times. "We shouldn't have to do kind of rivalry. The press is doing it. Mary's not worrying about running against anybody. She just wants to do her best."

Oliveira said the 25-year-old Slaney was not out to break any world records during her month-long tour of the European Grand Prix circuit.

"We don't talk about world records because we don't want that pressure," he said. "You can't step on a track thinking of breaking world records."

Slaney is due to arrive in London today and has scheduled a lunchtime press conference at a downtown hotel.

Allen traded to Yankees

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals yesterday traded relief pitcher Neil Allen and other considerations to the New York Yankees for a minor-league player to be named later.

Allen was traded to St. Louis in League team announced.

The 27-year-old right-hander, who began his major league career with the New York Mets, was scheduled to join the Yankees for a four-game series that begins today in Minnesota against the Twins.

Allen saved 67 games for the Mets from 1979 through 1982.

"I wanted him, asked for him and think he will be of great help to us in our stretch run," said Yankees Manager Billy Martin.

New York General Manager Clyde King described the addition of Allen as "a real plus."

"The youngster has a live arm, with a major league fastball and a big league curve," King said.

Allen was traded to St. Louis in 1983 with pitcher Rick Ownbey for first baseman Keith Hernandez.

"That year Allen, used primarily as a starter, was 10-4 with a 3.70 earned run average.

The Cardinals moved Allen to the bullpen in 1984 and he compiled a 9-4 record, with a 3.55 ERA and three saves.

Allen struggled this season. His record is 1-4, with one save (one since April 29) and an ERA of 5.59 in 29 innings. He has appeared in only six games since May.
