

Budd gives edge to Slaney in rematch

By ANDREW WARSHAW
AP Sports Writer

LONDON — Britain's Zola Budd conceded early defeat yesterday for her 3,000 meters showdown with Mary Decker Slaney, while the more experienced American warned that tomorrow's race — billed as an Olympics rematch — could help ruin the teenage Budd's career.

"I don't think I can win because Mary's best time is some eight seconds faster than mine," a nervous, softly-spoken Budd told a news conference 48 hours before the race at London's Crystal Palace stadium. "I'll be happy to beat my previous best."

The race, part of a two-day IAAF-Mobil Grand Prix meet, marks the first confrontation between the two athletes since their collision in the 3,000-meter final at the Los Angeles Olympic Games almost a year ago that wrecked their medal hopes. Slaney crashed out of the race in tears with a painful leg injury while Budd, whose concentration and will to run completely snapped, finished the race in seventh place to boos from the crowd.

"I may forgive but I don't forget. My view has not changed and I have nothing further to say on the matter," Slaney said.

Since Los Angeles, the two runners have made conciliatory gestures to one another and have exchanged letters, reportedly patching up their differences.

But they have never spoken directly and held separate news conferences within 30 minutes of each other at a downtown London hotel.

Slaney, looking confident and relaxed, her British husband — discuss thrower Richard Slaney — at her side, said she had come to London to race against the clock, not specifically against Budd, who has had a spotty start to her outdoor season with two wins and two defeats.

"Zola is a good athlete with a lot of potential but a lot of unnecessary pressure was put on her before the Olympics and in the year since," said Slaney, the world 1,500 and 3,000 meter champion. "If I was managing her, I probably would not have allowed her to run competitively this year. A lot of times, the pressure is more detrimental and unless the person can handle it and knows how to deal with it, it can ruin them."

"The fact that Zola came straight out of South Africa where there probably was not much pressure, created a difficult situation for her."

Both runners said they had no specific race plan for tomorrow.

"It will be more of a personal battle between me and the clock — nothing personal with Zola," said 26-year-old Slaney.

"I don't want to get caught in a tactical race but if no one is prepared to set the pace, then I don't mind doing it."

Then she added, half-mocking: "I may try to stay clear of certain feet, but that's all."

Budd stressed that neither she nor Slaney could afford to ignore the other 19 runners, who include Switzerland's Cornelia Burki, the fastest woman this year over 3,000 meters, and Norway's Ingrid Kristiansen, world record holder over 3,000 meters and the marathon.

"I'll just go in and run like I did when I won the world cross country championships in March, where I had no specific plan but ran well."

The race will be televised in the United States on ABC's "World Wide Sports" at 4 p.m. EDT.

SEATTLE (AP) — Bradford runner Zola Budd of South Africa has admitted publicly for the first time that she was responsible for the collision with Mary Slaney at the 1984 Summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

Mary Decker Slaney

In a copyright interview with Seattle television station KING, Budd said she cut in too close causing Slaney, then known as Mary Decker, to fall with 1,300 meters left in the 3,000-meter women's race.

Budd's coach, Pieter Labuschagne, also told the station his star pupil was to blame for the collision.

"I think Zola made a mistake by running the way she (ran) ... and got cut into — to the curb more decisively," said Labuschagne.

Slaney has always maintained Budd was responsible for the collision, but she told the television station she accepts a large share of the blame for failing to reach out and let Budd know she was too close.

Slaney said she wrote to Budd, who now lives in Guilford, England, in March and apologized for hurting her feelings with her comments after the race. Slaney told Budd "Don't bother" when she came over to apologize after the race and criticized her at an Olympics news conference.

Budd, running for the British team in the Olympics, said she was forced to cut in on Slaney by teammate Wendy Sly.

Revised playbooks ready for Steelers

LATROBE (AP) — The Pittsburgh Steelers open summer camp today with Coach Chuck Noll and his assistants armed with new offensive and defensive playbooks and waiting for the arrival of this year's draft picks.

"I don't think there are any major changes from last year," Noll said of the new playbooks. "The changes are more subtle than anything else. About the most we did was make an adjustment here and there to something we had been doing or emphasized something a little differently than we had before," Noll said.

As many as 72 players, including 25 veterans, were scheduled to report to camp at St. Vincent College near Latrobe, about 40 miles east of Pittsburgh.

Offensive coordinator Tom Moore said his playbook, about the size of the Pittsburgh telephone book, has charts, diagrams and codes and represents "what we do during the off-season."

"People probably wonder, but a lot goes into it," Moore said. Coaches said their work began by analyzing game films from last season, not concentrating on players as much as on plays. Moore said he and his offensive staff saw what worked and what didn't. Defensive coordinator Tony Dungy did much the same thing.

The playbooks followed.

"All I know is we put more in than we'll ever need," Moore said. "But don't you think it's better to be overprepared than underprepared?"

Meanwhile, the Steelers reportedly have reached a contract agreement with No. 6 draft pick, Auburn linebacker Gregg Carr.

Minnesota cornerback Andrew Harris, a No. 9 choice, was expected to report to camp, according to agent Ron Simon. But another No. 9 choice, Washington linebacker Fred Small, probably won't, according to agent Bud Hammack.

If Carr signs, the Steelers will have seven unsigned draft choices: Sims, offensive tackle Mark Whinnin of Nebraska, a second-round pick, center Dan Turk of Wisconsin, fourth round, linebacker Cam Jacobs of Kentucky, fifth round, punter Harry Newsome of Wake Forest, eighth round, Small, and safety Jeff Sanchez of Georgia, 12th round.
