

Budd no match for Slaney

By The Associated Press

LONDON — Mary Decker Slaney and Zola Budd shook hands, raced together again and finally buried their differences at London's Crystal Palace Stadium Saturday night.

"This does not prove anything. It just proves I was in good shape tonight," Slaney told reporters after comfortably beating Budd over 3,000 meters in their first meeting since colliding at the Los Angeles Olympics.

The race, part of an IAAF-Mobil Grand Prix track meet, had been built up as an Olympic rematch between the blonde, 28-year-old American and the timid, bespectacled 19-year-old, who tangled dramatically on the track in the Los Angeles Coliseum last August.

But despite the build-up, the stands here were only half full as Slaney won easily to set a world best time this year and Budd finished fourth 70 meters behind.

"All the pressure in this race was from the controversy, the interviews and the pictures," Slaney told a packed news conference.

"I was happy with the race. I wanted to run a little bit faster, but given the weather conditions I'm happy with it. I think with about two taps to go I started to push the pace just a little bit."

Slaney made only one reference to last year's Olympics, when she crashed on to the trackside clutching her leg in pain after tangling with Budd.

"I'm happy she wasn't in front of me," said the American, half-jokingly.

Until the last two laps, Budd kept herself close but could never move into high gear. Instead the American widened her lead and surged home to win in 8:32.91, the fastest time in the world this year by almost eight seconds.

Slaney said she did not think back to the Olympics when she knew that Budd was so close to her.

"I was happy someone was there at my right shoulder, no matter who it was," she said.

Budd said she was glad the race was finally over. "And I'm glad Mary ran so well," she added.

Asked if there was any stage at which she thought she might win, Budd replied, "No, not really, the last two laps were the worst. I wanted to run faster — it just wasn't there."

Budd said there were no hard feelings any longer between the two runners.

"I think all that has happened between us is in the past now and I'm looking towards the future," she said. "I think it has taken a lot of pressure off both of us."

Slaney said it was possible they would meet again in Edinburgh tomorrow night. Budd already is entered there for the 800 meters.

British newspapers reacted skeptically yesterday to the head-to-head clash between Mary Slaney and Zola Budd, describing the runners' first meeting since colliding at the Los Angeles Olympics as a mismatch rather than a rematch.

"It was really revenge for the Los Angeles collision which denied Mrs. Slaney — then Mary Decker — her chance of Olympic gold, then it was a hollow kind of revenge," wrote the Mail yesterday in a back-page lead story on the race.

The confrontation between Slaney and Budd was televised live in the United States and four other countries. The two athletes each received a reported 25,000 pounds ($35,000).

"Zola Budd was sacrificed to the talent of Mary Slaney upon an altar of American television money," said the Mail yesterday.

The tabloid, mass-circulation News of the World said the American's crushing victory "spoiled their much-hyped revenge match as the artificial sham it had so obviously become."

The Sunday People joined in the British media criticism, describing the Slaney-Budd confrontation as "an athletics soap opera demanded by the giant American TV networks."

All the British press agreed that Slaney was far superior and that the inexperienced Budd still had a lot to learn. "This was not so much a confrontation as an object lesson delivered by the American girl to the South African-born contender," wrote the Sunday Telegraph.

Some observers said that without 1984 gold medalist Marcia Pulice — she was invited by the organizers but was withdrawn by the Romanian federation — the race could not conceivably have been billed as an Olympics rematch.

"Zola Budd is a one-paced runner and Mary Decker (Slaney) is the complete athlete," wrote the Observer.

"But alas, the gold medalist at the Olympics was not indeed as why it was not a true contest, a true repeat of the Olympic final."

"Another reason for this 'no contest' is that last year — and indeed at the beginning of this year — Zola Budd was a girl with a fantastic power-to-weight ratio. This summer, she... is blossoming into a woman and we shall not know how good an athlete she is until that natural process is complete," the Observer said.

Hinault wins Tour de France

By ELAINE GANLEY
Associated Press Writer

PARIS — France's Bernard Hinault won the 72nd Tour de France yesterday, becoming only the third rider to capture the world's most prestigious cycling race five times.

Hinault was victorious in the 1978, 1979, 1981 and 1982 Tours. Countryman Jacques Anquetin won five races in the 1950s and 1960s, and Belgium's Eddy Merckx accomplished the feat in the 1970s. No rider has won the event six times.

Hinault's victory was a surprise. He was not the favorite to win, and he was not the strongest rider in the race. He was, however, the most consistent.

over Orleans to Paris, turning it over to the sprinters when they reached the French capital.

"The day went by without a single problem," Hinault said later. "We decided not to let anyone slip by us before the Champs Elysees," he said of his team's tactics.

Mathijs, riding for Splendor, finished the leg in 5 hours, 13 minutes and 56 seconds. Ireland's Kelly finished second, while France's Francis Castaing placed third.

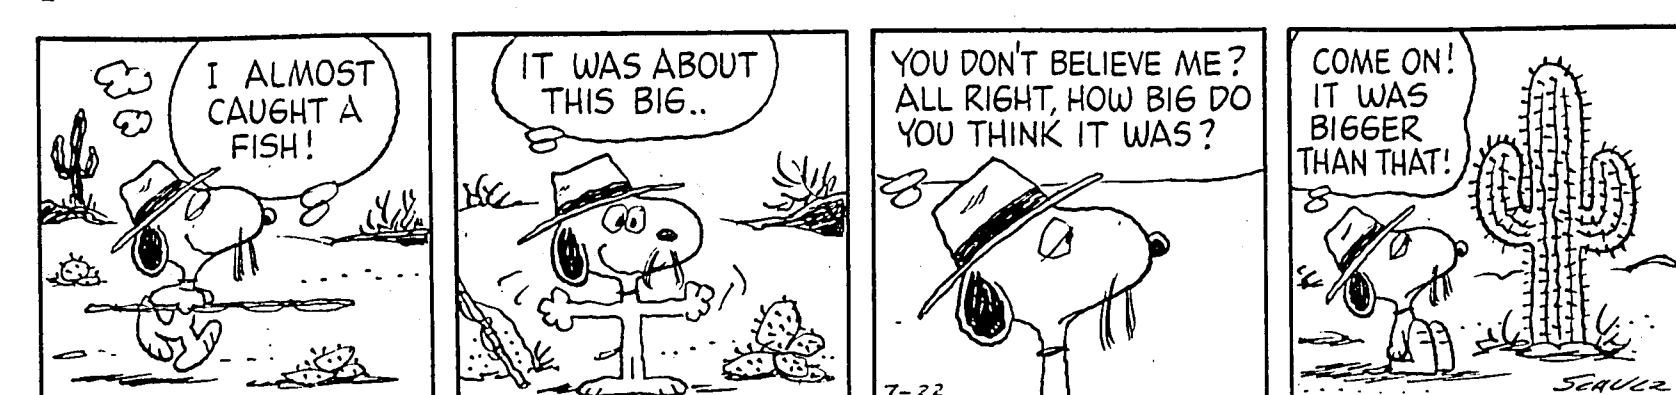

Hinault wound up 78th among the 144 riders who crossed the finish line in a pack. "Personally, I always tried to ride at the head of the pack... (but) it wasn't necessary to take risks this close to the finish," he said.
