An Unheard of Opportunity for a Few Select Majors.

Freshmen and Sophomores Majoring in Electrical Engineering...Computer Science...Languages.

This is your chance to find out about a unique opportunity to earn while you learn, through the National Security Agency's COOPERATIVE EDUCATION PROGRAM.

In case you haven't heard, NSA plays an important role in analyzing foreign signals, safeguarding our government's vital communications and securing government computer systems. Through NSA's Co-op Program, you'll gain valuable experience in your major field, while performing work that is uniquely important.

To make sure your learning experience is continually challenging, NSA varies your work assignments with each work period. Here are a few examples of what you could be doing:

- Electrical Engineering. Design and development, test and evaluation of electronic communications systems. Your multi-disciplinary assignments may extend to such rapidly advancing areas as optics, lasers, acoustics and micro-processors.
- Signals Analysts. Limited opportunities for students majoring in Electrical Engineering and Physics. Assignments include identification and classification of electro-magnetic emissions, radar systems, telemetry, beacon signals and trajectory data.
- Computer Science. Opportunities include applications programming, design and implementation of software systems such as data base management systems, real time systems, management information systems, networking and distributed processing systems.
- Languages. You must be majoring in a Slavic, Near-Eastern or Asian language. Work experiences include translation, reporting and analysis.

Don't miss this opportunity to be part of a learning experience that is unlike any other. Contact your Co-op Program Coordinator for an appointment to talk with an NSA representative.

NSA will be on campus for interviews Friday, Oct. 4. Contact Shri Henry at 863-0285 to schedule an interview.
An evening information session will be held at 7:00 p.m. on Thursday, October 3. See the Placement Office for details.
