PITTSBURGH - Pittsburgh Pirates Manager Chuck Tanner testified yesterday he never warned infielder Dale Berra to stay away from a man now accused of dealing cocaine to major league baseball players.

Tanner was the first defense witness in the U.S. District Court trial of Curtis Strong, 39, of Phila delphia, the former Phillies club house caterer accused of 14 counts of dealing cocaine to bal Iplayers while the Pirates were at home from 1980 to 1984 Meanwhile, former Pirates slugging star Willie Stargell was also requested to testify, but his attorney told defense attorney Adam O. Renfroe Jr. that Stargell would invoke his constitutional right against selfincrimination on any drug-related question, according to a source involved in the case who spoke only with anonymity. Stargell, now the Pirates' first base coach, denied talking to anyone associated with Strong's defense about testifying. haven't informed anybody of anything," he said. "I haven't talked to anybody.

Asked whether his attorney may have spoken to Renfroe, Stargell said, "I don't know." Stargell, the Pirates' team captain when they won the World Series in 1979, was identified last week by several former Pirates as the source of amphetamines in the team's locker room while a player. Stargell denied the Stargell, unlike the seven players who have testified for the Justice Department in the Strong case, was not given a grant of mmunity to testify.

The trial was recessed earlier than anticipated yesterday afternoon after Renfroe failed to call St. Louis Cardinals pitcher Joaquin Andujar as a witness.
