

Disappointment with conference voiced

University women student leaders voiced their disappointment with the second National Conference for Women Student Leaders and Women of Achievement yesterday, saying the conference stressed that women should compromise within the system rather than try to change it.

women's ability to change the organizations in which they are working," said Carol Gilmore, co-director of the Undergraduate Student Government's department of women's concerns at a brown bag lunch sponsored by the Center for Women Students.

Gilmore said the conference, held in Washington, D.C. last weekend, offered many interesting views on women in business and leadership, but failed to address specific problems that today's women encounter.

USG women's concerns member Jane Moyer who also attended the conference said the "superwoman" stereotype was emphasized throughout the conference and other non-traditional women's roles were not discussed.

"No one talked about the ERA, about equal rights and equal pay or abortion rights," Moyer said.

The conference stressed adopting male attributes rather than attempting to change society's perceptions of women, Gilmore said.

Because of their dissatisfaction with the conference, women there developed informal groups to discuss these problems, Gilmore said.

"We got together informally with others who were disillusioned with the conference and went over these things ourselves," Gilmore said.

WPSU needs pledges to cover costs

WPSU-FM, the student-run campus radio station, started its annual on-air fundraiser Monday, asking for donation pledges to help cover costs, the WPSU program director said.

Pat Donovan said the station, which is partly funded by the University, will continue the drive through Nov. 17.

"What we're allocated is nowhere near enough," said Donovan, "when you consider the cost of equipment, records and advertising among other things."

Assistant station manager Jeff Daley said the station does not have a fund-raising goal.

"Our only goal is to raise more each year," Daley said "We'd like to raise a lot more than $3,000," the amount raised last year.

Although there are no figures yet, Donovan said pledges have been coming in at a much higher rate than last year, with the station averaging "a couple hundred dollars in pledges a day."

Donovan said there are several "pledge incentives," including record giveaways to high bidders and entrance for anyone who pledges more than $20 in a drawing for a Technics compact disc player, donated by Mace Electronics, 103 S. Pugh

St. The station will also offer entrance in a drawing for a football and a Penn State jersey, each autographed by Joe Paterno, in exchange for donations.

Donovan said WPSU will broadcast a promotional spot for the fund-raiser done by former Penn State wide receiver Jimmy Cefalo and will feature Interfraternity Council president John Rooney as disc jockey on a show next week.

Daley said some off-air fundraising activities are also scheduled. Station employees will be canning on College Avenue and on the Mall, and handing out record singles in exchange for donations.
