

Linksters end topsy-turvy season

By MEGAN CULHANE
Collegian Sports Writer

It was a roller coaster ride of a fall season for the men's golf team. The season started off modestly with a very young team possessing the potential to fulfill Head Coach Mary Kennedy's goal of a national championship.

Slowly, the team set its goals, nurtured young talent, boosted its confidence and felt its way around the golf course. After two fifth-place showings, the Linksters turned it on firing 598 to clinch the first-place spot at the Walter McLaughlin tournament. The title marked the first time the team had won a tournament in almost three years and established the Linksters as a force to be reckoned with.

With that tangible win securely in their golf bags, the Linksters headed for the East Coast Athletic Conference qualifier. The team was at the peak of its season and under pressure to maintain the status it had previously established. Riding on a wave of confidence, or maybe overconfidence, it lost the qualifier as a bridge to bigger and better things.

The Linksters went on to win in—indeed, they were favored to win—but after one round of do-or-die golf, they settled for a disheartening third-place finish.

A chance for redemption came when the Linksters hosted the Atlantic 10 Championship Tournament. Penn State had lost won an A-10 tournament in 1983 by a mere one stroke. This season, the team again gained a one-stroke victory by nudging out arch-rival Temple 623 to 624.

The team was pleased at the chance to get another notch in the win column.

The Linksters entered the season's home stretch. Their two wins out of four tries wasn't a bad record, but the team was shooting for three out of five. The ECAC Championships

'Even though the final outcome had to come about, I feel we are still successful as a team. It has been one of the most successful seasons I've had coaching.'

located on the horizon and, with the A-10 victory fresh in their minds, the Linksters had hopes of another win. The team's play fell short of those expectations, however, and the Linksters ended the season with an anti-climatic eighth-place showing.

"I thought we would win (the ECACs), but we forgot one thing," sophomore Dan Braun said. "You've got to play well to win."

Reflecting on the season, Kennedy said that it was a positive one from her standpoint as a coach.

"Even though the final outcome had to come about, I feel we are still successful as a team," Kennedy said. "It has been one of the most successful seasons I've had coaching. I'm happy that I kept my decision on the lineup. It seemed to work out the best way. The combination seemed to work well."

"A couple of wins combined with a couple of letdowns contributed to the final disappointment. We're not looking backward and saying 'Look what we did.'"

The players, too, look back at the season with pride.

"We had a great season," Braun said. "The tournaments we won were great team efforts. There were the bad points, but the winning overshadowed them. We ended sorry, but you can't sit around crying about it or you'll lose confidence."

Kennedy said the final letdown makes the team more eager to start the spring season. She said if the Linksters didn't have the disappointing finish in the fall, there might have been a hint of overconfidence to taint the team's attitude.

"As winter approaches, the Linksters will be driven indoors to practice, Kennedy said the team will concentrate on both individual and team goals, as well as learning to trust themselves and their golf games. The time will provide the team with a chance to change strategies and cover past mistakes.

ASCEND TO HIGH TECH WITH ASC.

Careers take off at ASC... because we have. In our eleven fast-paced years, many rewarding careers have been made as we expand our participation and expertise in data communications, electronic warfare, signal processing and systems engineering. Raising the standard of technological excellence is our goal in a broad range of disciplines, a goal we seek to share with graduates in:

- Electrical Engineering
- Computer/Engineering Science
- Systems Engineering

Disciplines will include:
HARDWARE: Microprocessors, Computer Simulation, Digital to Analog Converters, Artificial Intelligence, Digital Processing, Operating Systems, Digital Communications, Compression Algorithms, Communications Protocols, Computer-based Training Systems, Real-Time

Processing, and Signal Analysis.
SOFTWARE: FORTRAN, Ada, LISP, PL/I, C, CMS2, UNIX, MS/DOS, and RMX.
Highly motivated individuals who possess strong academic qualifications, demonstrate leadership abilities and desire a challenging career are encouraged to consider ASC. U.S. citizenship required for employment.
