Port Matilda native and Peace Corps veteran George Field is running for the 77th District seat in the state House of Representatives.

The University is a vital part of the district because it is the largest employer and serves as a magnet to business and economic development, he said.

Close races not to affect voter turnout in '86

By BRIAN HANNON
Collegian Staff Writer

Although the 1986 election campaign has provided the state's citizens with a close gubernatorial race, a narrow U.S. Senate contest and heated U.S. House races, state officials predict an average voter turnout next week.

"Voter turnout is highest in presidential years. This year there will be a high turnout, but not quite as high as the '84 vote," said Jeanne Sult, chairwoman of the Republican Committee of Centre County.

Candidates differ on uses for the surplus

By MIKE LENIO
Collegian Staff Writer

Local candidates for the state General Assembly say education and economic development are expenditures they want targeted with the state's projected budget surplus.

Rudy's opponent, Republican candidate Joyce Conklin Williamson, said, "I think that the budget surplus should be redistributed throughout public education, rather than even higher education."
