Conference helps greeks meet potential

Collegian Staff Writer

Pre-Greek Week activities were launched vesterday with a leadership conference designed for greeks who have not yet realized their potential, said Michelle Hanley, Panhellenic Council presi-

The conference was the first of its kind held by greeks at the University, she said, adding that it will hopefully become an annual event.

Rick Funk, assistant director of student organizations and program development, said he hoped the conference, which offered workshops dealing with topics in self-confidence, communication skills and humor/creativity, drew some of the potential leaders in the greek system. 'One of the positive aspects of fraternity and sorority membership is the opportunity to develop the leadership potential with our members." he

Barbie Tootle, special assistant to the president at Ohio State University and the keynote speaker yesterday in Schwab Auditorium, stressed that students have to be a little selfish when involved in organizations to be sure they receive something in proportion to what they contribute.

The conference was not targeted to officers in the greek community, but to younger members chosen by their president as having potential to grow as leaders and members of the University community, Hanley said.

Kelly Lynch, Greek Week chairwoman, said the week will be different this year because it will include activities the week before it officially starts, April 20 to 24.

There will be a movie night in the HUB tonight for all greeks, ice skating on Tuesday, and a swim night at the McCoy Natatorium on Wednesday, she

The theme for Greek Week this year is "Greek Life is More Than Just a Party," Lynch said, and added that spirit and unity among greeks will be stressed throughout the week. Attending the leadership conference yesterday provided an opportunity for greeks to earn "spirit points" for their CCSG is designed as an advocacy group to address the needs of students attending the University's 17 Commonwealth campuses. Each Commonwealth campus has three student representatives.

clude strengthening communications and improve CCSG's internal strucbetween the Commonwealth cam- ture, including reducing apathy among its members, Price said.

According to CCSG officials, problems facing the organization include low attendance at meetings and poorly informed representatives. Though CCSG candidates contended that restructuring CCSG could ease most of the organization's problems, Price said, "CCSG's problems and solutions lie within all of us." "Cutting down the constitution and examining every section is not the answer," Price said. Rather, conducting more productive meetings and initiating new programs to increase interest within the organization are the answers.

Prior to the elections, J. Thomas Eakin, University assistant vice president of student programs, presented a report detailing CCSG's weaknesses - including difficulty in communicating with the campuses and meeting their needs - and several recommendations.

The recommendations included redefining the role of the coordinator, increasing meeting agenda distribution among the campuses, and promoting group unity.

Following his election, Price said he will examine the report's recommendation closely and act upon the most promising recommendations to improve CCSG.
