Speaker to talk about groups' racial tensions

By KIRSTEN LEE SWARTZ
Collegian Staff Writer

A black Jewish man will speak about the historical and current tensions between black and Jewish communities at 7:30 tonight in Eisenhower Chapel's Memorial Lounge.

Julius Lester is the former field secretary for the Student Non-Violence Coordinating Committee, a major student organization in the 1960's civil rights movement. He currently teaches Afro-American Studies and the Near Eastern and Judaic Studies Program at the University of Massachusetts/Amherst.

Sponsored by the Office of Religious Affairs, the program, entitled "Blacks and Jews in Dialogue," is the result of committee of eight faculty and staff members formed last spring to examine tensions between the two communities at the University, said Thomas Poole, director of Eisenhower Chapel.

"It is important for black and Jewish students to sit down in a room and explore the issues first hand," Poole said.

Larry Young, director of the Paul

Robeson Cultural Center said the shared history of victimization is partly responsible for the tensions between the two groups.

Tensions also exist because of the role of Jewish-controlled institutions in perpetuating racial stereotypes, and the political relationship of Israel to southern Africa.

Bernard Bronstein, an advisor in the Division of Undergraduate Studies, said students showing prejudice to one another often are acting out of a historical ignorance.

"Both the black students and the Jewish students have an ignorance not only of the other group's history but of their own," Bronstein said.

Author of about 13 books, including "Look Out, Whitey! Black Power's Gon' Get Your Mama, Lester has published more than 100 essays and reviews in publications including, The New York Times Op-Ed Page, The New Republic, Ms. Magazine, Explorations in Judaism, and Reconstructionist.

His most recent book is The Adventures of Brer Rabbit, the first of four volumes retelling the Tales of Uncle Remus. Forthcoming is Lovesong: Becoming A Jew.
