big bright spot in guard Geno Carlisle. The Big Ten's second-leading scorer at 20.5 ppg, Carlisle poured 36 on Penn State in the first meeting between the teams on Jan. 13. The Lions escaped with an 83-74 overtime win behind a career-high 30 from Glenn Sekunda.

"He's probably one of the best in the league at getting his own shot," Lion coach Jerry Dunn said of Carlisle. "And not only does he get his own shot, he can make it. His athleticism really creates problems in terms of him being able to go around people."

While dealing with Carlisle could be a problem, at least the Lions should be rested enough to chase him all over the floor.

They've had five full days off since beating Michigan 67-57 last Thursday at the Jordan Center, and Dunn has been limiting practices to keep his players from having sea legs as the long season winds down.

It also gave them a chance to put recent losses to Purdue and Indiana completely out of their minds and think only about a great second half against Michigan that saw them come back from as many as eight down to win by 10. Dunn said they will look to build on the momentum of that victory.

"I think it was good for our confidence," Dunn said. "I think it's got to help, especially coming down the stretch here."

The Lion minds will be focused on the tourney during that stretch drive, but they are not yet convinced that Henning isn't going to show up.

"(Purdue has) three games left," Stephens said, "and in the Big Ten anything can happen."

lenged her teammate, so the two asked the unsuspecting passengers. Yes, it was Christopher Knight and Susan Olsen.

"That was when I was on crutches and Kerry was on crutches, and they were like, 'Wow, your team is pretty banged up,'" Foley said. "They were nice. It was the highlight of my trip."

All sitcoms aside, Foley is now focusing on the end of her collegiate career and fulfilling her dream of making the top flight at NAAs. An appropriate task for someone known to her teammates as "bird".

That nickname has stuck with Foley since childhood, when she always seemed to be smaller than everyone else. It was a blessing and a curse.

"We were coming home from a meet when she was in seventh grade and we stopped at an antique store," Sue Foley explained. "She tried on a white cape and the man who worked there told her she'd be the hit of her first grade class. She was so humiliated."

But Foley is getting the last laugh. While she doesn't practice vault anymore — it's the worst on her knee — she is once again catching the magic she found last year.

After graduation in August, Foley wants to get her masters in education while coaching gymnastics and eventually be an elementary school teacher. She is currently looking at about 10 schools, including Temple and N.C. State.

"After her injury, it was initially just heartbreaking for us," Sue Foley said. "I'm just so happy that's she's back."

Kittles charged $3,100 on card

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Villanova basketball star Kerry Kittles, suspended last week for using a university phone card, rang up $3,100 in unauthorized calls since 1994, school officials reported.

Villanova revealed for the first time the details of the incident that forced its All-American guard to the bench for the last three games of his senior season.

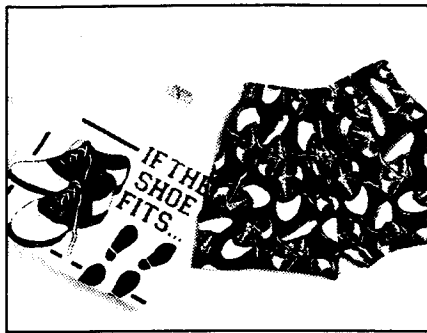

According to the report submitted to the NCAA, Kittles was given the card so he could phone a reporter for an interview while the team was in Anchorage for the Great Alaska Shootout tournament in 1994.

Kittles returned the card, but kept a copy of the number and used it for personal calls while the team was on the road, said athletic director Gene DeFilippo.

The school's business office discovered the unauthorized use last week. By correlating the calls to the teams' travel schedule, the office was able to attribute more than $3,000 in charges to Kittles.

When asked about the calls, Kittles immediately admitted he'd been using the number. With the help of his family, he has repaid the money, DeFilippo said.

But the NCAA, which forbids special privileges to student athletes, hit Kittles with a three-game suspension that wiped out his chance to break the Villanova scoring record and help boost his team's seeding for the Big East Tournament.
