Hall makes reporter wax nostalgic

INDIANAPOLIS — I'm not pleased very often. Just ask any of my co-workers. I always bitch and moan about something.

But watching Penn State and Purdue battle for the Big Ten women's basketball tournament championship in the Hinkle Fieldhouse was a real treat. I was actually disappointed to see Tina Nicholson ice the win with two free throws with just under four seconds remaining. I was greedy. I wanted five more minutes. I wanted the game to go into overtime.

but it wasn't just the game that made the tournament great. It was also the fans. Most of the people around State College are too finicky, especially the Penn State student body. I was ashamed to be a Penn State student when I saw the other schools' followings.

Granted, from State College it's a long drive to Indianapolis, but even our home crowds are not as fired up as the crowds of Hinkle Fieldhouse. These fans were so into the tournament and outcome that they stayed in town even after their team lost to watch the finals.

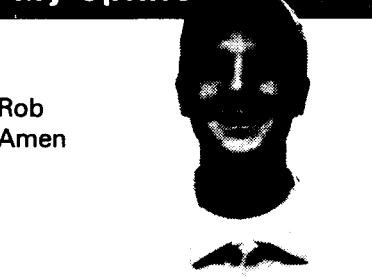

The funniest were the Iowa fans. The Hawkeyes lost in the semifinals to Purdue, but their fans stuck around to cheer — against the Boilermakers. They joined in the cheer "We are Penn State" and were louder than some of the Nittany and Lady Lion home games.

Sorry Penn State fans, contrary to what you might think, you definitely are not the best fans in the world. You are not even the best in the Big Ten. I do think you are the most stubborn. Although, I commend those Lady Lion fans who were here.

The situation is not even isolated to basketball, either. Some of you won't even crawl out of bed to watch a noon football game at Beaver Stadium.

Speaking of arenas...

My opinion

Rob Amen

The aura surrounding Hinkle Fieldhouse was incredible. Sitting about 10 minutes outside of downtown Indianapolis on the campus of Butler University. This fieldhouse made you forget that sports in America, both amateur and professional, are self-destructing.

The old rafters, bleacher seating at the top level, the huge windows at the top of the ancient structure — this was where basketball was meant to be played.

In a basketball world where everyone is concerned with themselves and money, holding the Big Ten women's basketball tournament at the aged fieldhouse stands as a model to be imitated.

No where else do you see greed and money as evident than in the world of sports. Everyone has their hand out, saying they need more money. They are all concerned about outstanding contracts and top notch facilities.

I have a message for all of those people — there is no way the tournament could have been any better if it was held at a newer arena, such as the Bryce Jordan Center. If it was, it would have probably detracted from the excitement.

Heck, you know Hinkle Fieldhouse had to be the right choice, even the movie Hoosiers was filmed here, at least the state championship game. Gene Hackman's Hickory High School team pulled out the title in the waning seconds on this very floor.

Hinkle Fieldhouse is basketball.

If the Big Ten men's teams are considering a postseason tournament like their women counterparts, they would be wise to choose a site at Hinkle.

For those of you who don't know what the historic fieldhouse looks like, picture Rec Hall with windows at the top and with another tier of seating at the top.

Don't get me wrong, these new arenas are nice, but they isolate the fans from the game because of seating arrangements. The fans are too far away from the floor, at least at the Jordan Center. That is why I dislike it so much.

For as much money as the University spent on it, you think it could have been better for the fans. For the players and coaches it is great, but I think it takes away from the fans, especially after being in Rec Hall for so long.

Yeah, yeah, I can hear the proponents now, "Look at all the money it yields."

That's great, but if the University wanted the best of both worlds, it would have modeled the Jordan Center after Ohio State's St. John Arena. There the seating runs upward, not outward, creating a much more intimate setting, and it can still pack nearly 14,000 people into it.

Ohio State is in the early stages of constructing a new 19,000 seat facility by the year 1998.

Bad idea.

Then again, I'm a traditionalist. I don't even want to see professional baseball go to interleague play.

By the way, whatever happened to Jimmy Chitwood?
