will be the core of the transition at the law school this fall, said Deborah Ryerson, director of communications.

"It's probably going to be pretty subtle," she said of this semester's activities. The affiliation will become formal when the University officially merges with the school in July 2000, she added.

Student Events

Student-organized events will take place around campus throughout Fall Semester. Two events intended to increase student awareness and involvement in the University community are scheduled for early in the semester.

Voter registration, organized by the Undergraduate Student Government, will continue this week at The Student Book Store, 330 E. College Ave., said USG Senator John Wood.

About 145 organizations will have booths at the Student Involvement Fair Sept. 10 and 11, said HUB Information Desk Coordinator Bob Brouse.

"It benefits everyone because it gets all of the organizations here together," he said. "It helps to bring the size of the school down to freshmen."

Other performances this semester include:

Ballet Folklorico de Mexico	Sept. 23
Jose Limón Dance Company	Oct. 4
Carousel	Oct. 9, 10
Stuttgart Philharmonic	Oct. 16
The Neville Brothers	Nov. 4
The Nutcracker	Dec. 5, 6

ed to Valley Vista Park in Patton Township, a news release said.

Both houses were original Sears, Roebuck and Co. mail order homes from the turn of the century.

The College Heights traffic diverters will remain an issue throughout this coming year, Paletta said.

"That's just an ongoing thing," she said. "Ferguson Township is actually suing the borough over this."

The diverters were placed on residential streets north of campus last year to prevent drivers from cutting through the East College Heights area from North Atherton Street to Park Avenue. Whether the diverters have actually have created more problems than they solve is still in dispute among residents and officials.

The State College Police Department is also gearing up for another semester, as it comes off its own "semester break." State College without students is noticeably quieter. However, the police department does not expect any major changes in crime patterns or any different problems from last semester, said Lt. Diane Conrad.

"We'll have most of the usual problems, alcohol-related and students learning how to be good neighbors again, I suppose," she said.

The department has recently hired an officer who will specialize in domestic violence issues.

Although all officers have training in this area, Conrad said, this domestic violence officer will be able to better monitor cases of domestic violence and work with other agencies to help combat the problem.

The new domestic violence officer will also play a major role in the county-wide training all State College police officers will attend this fall. The training will focus on domestic violence and sexual assault.
