Campus Briefs

Students calling 863-9000 to register for classes yesterday afternoon encountered difficulty with the voice response system, said Scott Smith, assistant director of administrative computing. The system, which allows students to register for classes and express intent to graduate, was completely disabled for less than an hour, he said. By mid-afternoon, he said, the system was repaired and was again fully functional.

Policeman's death linked to his wife's Mafia ties

By TOM HAYS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — A mob soldier dies in a 1987 hit. Another reputed mobster survives a shootout in 1992. This week, an off-duty police officer is shot to death as he sits in his car.

All three victims had at least one thing in common: a mystery woman named Kim Kennaugh.

Authorities were exploring Kennaugh's alleged links to one of New York City's Mafia crime families yesterday as part of a wide-ranging investigation into the ambush killing Monday night of her police officer husband, Ralph Dols, sources said.

At a wake yesterday, Kennaugh wore a black suit and dabbed her eyes as hundreds of police officers and other mourners filed past an open casket. One law enforcement source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said investigators had found no clear evidence so far that Dols' death was related to organized crime.

But the fact that both he and Kennaugh's first husband, a reputed Colombo family soldier, died in what appeared to be planned executions in the same Brooklyn neighborhood, 10 years apart, "is not being dismissed as mere coincidence," the source said.

Authorities have noted two other mob ties: Kennaugh once lived with Colombo and shootout survivor Joel Cacace; and her brother, August, reportedly is a Colombo soldier who was convicted in the 1981 murder of a restaurant owner. Mayor Rudolph Giuliani has labeled Dols' slaying a possible "organized crime hit."

Police also were investigating an incident earlier this month — in which a hit-and-run driver injured Dols near his home — to determine if it was a failed attempt on his life.

He was arriving home from a shift as a uniformed housing police officer near midnight Monday when he was ambushed, police said.

As Dols drove up, a man sprang from a dark-colored Chevrolet and fired seven shots through Dols' car window. The Chevrolet, carrying up to three men, sped away.

Investigators began focusing on the background of the officer's wife after discounting the possibility that the killing was in retaliation for an Aug. 2 incident in which an off-duty Dols turned in a drunken man who shot a gun outside a tavern.
