News briefs

Gerontology Center receives four grants

The Gerontology Center in the Penn State's College of Health and Human Development received in $4,288,721 in a combination of four grants.

The National Institutes of Health awarded the center $3,901,388 to support the Seattle Longitudinal Study through March 31, 2004.

The National Institutes of Health also made a contribution of $131,342 for an annual conference program on social structures and aging, which involves examining the impact of social macro-structures on the aging process of individuals.

The Spry Foundation of Washington, D.C., gave $84,000 to develop a caregiver information system for Pennsylvania. The project involves the creation of an interactive Web site set up and coordinated by Penn State.

To complement these contributions, the University of Pittsburgh's Geriatric Education Center gave $171,991.

For more information, visit the Gerontology Center Web site (<http://geron.psu.edu>).

Busta Rhymes to play at Rec Hall

Woo-Ha!

Busta Rhymes, one of rap's most creative artists, will be partying with Penn State at 8 p.m. Nov. 14 in Rec. Hall.

Busta's style of reggae-influenced rap is a schizophrenic mix of complexity and humor. He has worked with artists such as Janet Jackson, A Tribe Called Quest and Mary J. Blige. More recently, he contributed to the Rugrats Movie soundtrack. His latest album, Extinction Level Event (The Final World Front) continues with the theme of apocalypse that carried through his previous efforts.

Tickets go on sale Oct. 25 at Eisenhower Auditorium for Penn State students with IDs and cost $20. Non-students can purchase tickets for $24 starting Oct. 26, and there is a six-ticket limit. The show is part of University Concert Committee's concert series and is sponsored by University Park Allocation Committee.

Last of liberty trees must come down

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — The last of the liberty trees — where American colonists once incited rebellion against the British — has been so damaged by storms and decay it should be cut down, according to an expert who examined the 400-year-old tulip poplar.

Winds from Hurricane Floyd fractured the trunk and the tree now endangers anything near it, arborist Russell Carlson said in a report to the state and St. John's College.

The college, which has held its commencement under the tree for 200 years, will decide soon whether to remove the tree or try to save it, said spokeswoman Barbara Goyette.

Liberty trees existed in most if not all of the 13 colonies and were a potent Revolutionary War symbol. Maryland's is the last surviving Liberty Tree, where the Sons of Liberty met and plotted the American Revolution.
