SPORTS IN BRIEF

Sen. McCain vouches for steroid legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saying Major League Baseball "can't be trusted," Sen. John McCain warned yesterday that legislation might be needed to force the sport to change its steroids policy.

The Arizona Republican joined the chorus of congressmen expressing disappointment with baseball's drug-testing plan after testimony from commissioner Bud Selig and union head Donald Fehr at the House Government Reform Committee hearing on steroids Thursday.

"It just seems to me they can't be trusted," McCain told ABC's "This Week."

"What do we need to do? It seems to me that we ought to seriously consider ... a law that says all professional sports have a minimum level of performance-enhancing drug testing," McCain said.

In March 2004, McCain's Senate Commerce Committee held a hearing on steroids in baseball, pressure that helped lead to the drug-testing plan that owners and players agreed to in January.

Several lawmakers were particularly critical of two provisions in that agreement: one that allows players to be fined instead of suspended for failing a drug test, and another that calls for testing to be suspended if there's a government investigation.

"I was a little dubious about the necessity of having hearings because I had been told that baseball had installed a weak, but legitimate, regimen," McCain said. "I now applaud my colleagues in the House because what this highlighted was the absolute insensitivity of both the owners and the players to the American people."

Mavericks coach quits; Johnson will take over

DALLAS (AP) — Don Nelson called the Dallas Mavericks into a group after their morning shootaround like he had so many times. Then he told them he was done coaching, and handed his whistle to Avery Johnson.

Another one of Nelson's tricks, some of his players figured.

"I thought it was a joke, really, how everything was said and how it all transpired," guard Jason Terry said.

"It pretty much came out of nowhere," four-time All-Star Dirk Nowitzki said. "I thought for sure he was going to finish the season with us." Nope.

Nelson, the second-winningest coach in NBA history, resigned as coach Saturday, and turned the team over to his protege.

The 64-year-old Nelson also had the title of general manager, but most of those duties were done by his son, Donnie, the team's president of basketball operations. The elder Nelson will stay with the team as a consultant.

Spurs' Duncan injures right ankle vs. Pistons

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — San Antonio star Tim Duncan crumpled to the floor with a sprained right ankle in the opening minutes of yesterday's game against the Detroit Pistons.

The Spurs said X-rays were negative and Duncan is day to day.

Before he left the arena, Duncan said he didn't know how serious the injury was.

Duncan's ankle turned in gruesome fashion after he scored and landed on Rasheed Wallace's foot under the basket. He immediately grabbed his right foot as he fell to the floor, where he stayed for a few minutes before being helped off without putting weight on his right foot. Duncan missed two games earlier this month with a sprained right ankle.

After X-rays were taken, he was pushed in a wheelchair to San Antonio's locker room. The two-time MVP and NBA Finals MVP began the game averaging 21.2 points, 11.5 rebounds and 2.7 blocks this season.

Mets acquire SP Ishii from L.A. for C Phillips

VERO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The New York Mets plugged a hole in their starting rotation yesterday, acquiring left-hander Kazuhisa Ishii from the Los Angeles Dodgers for catcher Jason Phillips.

The Mets traded for Ishii to fill the void created when they lost Steve Trachsel to a back injury this spring. Trachsel, who made 33 starts for New York last season, had surgery Saturday to repair a herniated disc and will miss at least three to six months.

Ishii will step into the No. 5 spot in the rotation behind Pedro Martinez, Tom Glavine, Kris Benson and Victor Zambrano.
