

Three Days Grace will rock the BJC for a third time

By Lindsay Cryer
COLLEGIAN STAFF WRITER

Two years after Three Days Grace performed in the Bryce Jordan Center, the band's fans can now look forward to another show — one, to quote a song, that they will hopefully not "hate everything about."

Three Days Grace, along with bands Breaking Benjamin and Flyleaf, will make a tour stop at the BJC on Wednesday, Feb. 17.

This will be the third visit to the BJC for Three Days Grace and Breaking Benjamin, which originated in Wilkes-Barre. The bands performed with Nickelback in 2007 and with Seether in 2008.

Bernie Punt, director of sales and marketing for the BJC, said he expects the show to be very well-attended if the popularity of the 2008 concert is any indication.

"We expect it to sell very well based upon past performance," Punt said. "It was one of the best-selling in 2008, and we expect the same in 2010."

If you go

Penn State students will be able to secure tickets noon Wednesday at the HUB Robeson Center, Eisenhower Box Office, Penn State Downtown Theatre Center, Bryce Jordan Center and online. A limited amount of student tickets will be available for $24.75, courtesy of the University Park Allocation Committee.

Tickets will be available to the public noon on Friday. These tickets will be $39.75 for general-admission floor and reserved seating. Chris Tallarico wasn't able to go to the bands' April 2008 show and is hoping to attend this time.

"I had a few friends that went, and they said that they sound really good live and that it was a good concert," Tallarico (junior-microbiology) said. "I'm glad that I have a second chance to go and see them."

Headlining band Three Days Grace's latest album, "Life Starts Now," came out last September. Along with songs from the recent album, fans can hope to hear older songs, such as 2003's "I Hate Everything About You."

"I've always enjoyed Three Days Grace and the song 'Animal I Have Become,'" Tallarico said. He said he is especially excited to see Breaking Benjamin.

Punt said it will be an exciting show, adding that he looks forward to hearing the three rock bands perform.
