

Pa. snowfall could surpass 1995-96 record

65.5 inches, set in 1995-1996. At Philadelphia International Airport, two major airlines planned to cancel all flights due to the snow. In western Pennsylvania, thousands of customers remained without power from the weekend snow.

Allegheny Power said about 40,000 in southwestern Pennsylvania were still without electricity, while Duquesne Light reported 3,000 without power.

Michael Giambattista, 56, a truck driver from Elizabeth, Pa., had been without power since 11 p.m. Friday. He was staying at a Red Cross shelter near his home with his girlfriend and 13-year-old son.

"I've never been without power like this," said Giambattista, adding that he was trying to help keep spirits up among the more than 50 people at the shelter. "Mother Nature, you can't battle her. She's going to win."

The impending arrival of Tuesday's snow again set in motion what were becoming familiar patterns in the wake of the weekend storm that dropped more than two feet in many places, and a late December storm that left nearly as much. The snow was expected to start sometime in the afternoon and continue through today.

"It is a concern, especially for those people that are still digging out, that there is not a lot of time between systems," said Valerie Meola, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service.
