Tuesday night, putting its first three runs on the base. But the Lions managed to score only one run in the inning, on a double play. The Lions didn't score in either of the two innings but posted at least one run in each of their final five at-bats, including three home runs from Heath and another two from Sean Deegan. Deegan and Heath each had three runs while Heath also added three RBI runs scored. "It comes with a lot of work," Heath said. "These guys are good athletes and they can hit, but they've been trying to get and crush balls, instead of just hitting them solid. They quieted that down [Tuesday] and showed." Penn State players were not talking to the media after Tuesday's game. Before the Lions rattled off 10 runs, relievers who hadn't pitched since the game against Kent State to keep them in the game. Junior Mike Pierce entered the game in the seventh with Penn State trailing 10-0. He allowed two runs on two hits but he also avoided further damage by forcing two batters into a strikeout and recording a pair of outs in the eighth with the help of

Paterno

Paterno from speculating on the addition of at least one more team. "When all of this happens, I'll probably be out of this thing," Paterno said. "I'd like to see our particular conference, the Big Ten, move east a little bit, into the East because it would give us a little broader television market and a little bit more exposure." "The coming up with this ideal pairing is something Paterno compared to a marriage. He said the Big Ten has to be willing to find a team — or teams — that share the same interests as the other 11 schools, both on and off the field. The school would have to place a high value on academics and wouldn't be a school the other teams in the Big Ten could just "kick around," he said. With Paterno's estimation, conferences may expand to as many as 16 teams. He said it would be naive to think the Big Ten could keep pace if it didn't move ahead. And the other coaches agreed expansion will continue to be talked about until a plan is settled or dismissed. "On one hand I would say it's inevitable," Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz said. "It just seems to be the way college football is going right now. If it happens, it happens. I won't be surprised if it doesn't happen that would shock me either." Pryor continuing to mature Ohio State coach Jim Tressel said his junior quarterback is playing well through the spring practices, but his expectations for Terrelle Pryor are high. Pryor is spending the spring working on his footwork, something Tressel said has helped the quarterback as he progresses through his reads. Tressel said he started seeing improvements in Pryor's quarterbacking during Rose Bowl practice, and he's using that maturation as a springboard into this season. With two seasons under his belt, Pryor has a much better understanding of his receivers' routes and is comfortable taking the check down, Tressel said. While Pryor's demeanor through spring practices was described as calm, Tressel said the quarterback needs to increase the tempo of the offense. On the field, Tressel said he isn't surprised by the success Pryor had during his first two seasons, but he wants his signal caller taking on a more prominent role. "The other thing that will continue to work out, and it's going to be important for this team, is to have him continue to emerge as a leader," Tressel said. "I think the better you do your craft and the more confidence you have in your craft, the more you have a chance to be a leader."
