After weeks of speculation and disputed contracts, UPUA unveiled the lineup for its inaugural Last Stop music festival Monday.

Fabulous, State Radio, Matt and Kim, and Titus Andronicus will headline the April 30 event.

The acts were announced Monday night on The Lion 90.7 FM.

Beginning at 5 p.m. Monday, The Lion played song clips from each of the headlining bands while listeners called in to guess the artist in order to win VIP backstage passes for the music festival. With these passes, the four winners will receive backstage and VIP tent access, former University Park Undergraduate Association (UPUA) Programming Chairman Mike Wallace said.

"They're just going to get a very cool experience," Wallace (senior-economics) said.

Titus Andronicus, from Glen Rock, N.J., is an indie-rock band that was named one of the top 10 new bands of 2010 by Rolling Stone, Wallace said.

Penn State Lion Ambassadors pretend to grill new freshmen on Penn State facts as well as give them orders, re-enacting historical Penn State past times where freshmen had to wear "dinks" (hats). This was done to draw attention to an open house, which will be held on Wednesday. At the event Ambassadors will give tours of Old Main. More coverage on the Old Main Open House | LOCAL, Page 4.

Plans move ahead

State College Borough Council moved new student housing plans on to further discussion.

Council took the first steps Monday night to expand downtown student housing — a process that could level Canyon Pizza to make room for a new student apartment high rise.

The State College Borough Council voted 5-1 to ask the State College Planning Commission to look into a "student incentive overlay district," which aims to increase downtown student housing and is something the borough has never undertaken before, said Planning Director Carl Hess.

The changes would increase how many people can live at certain downtown properties to make room for apartment complexes. One of those properties is 250 E. Beaver Ave., where Canyon Pizza and the Sozo Art Institute are located.

But the apartments would have to follow new building codes. See COUNCIL, Page 2.

Two female Penn State students told police they were assaulted by a man at the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity house early Sunday morning, the State College Police Department said.

At about 12:15 a.m. Sunday, during what police called a party at the 508 Locust Lane property, two women told police the man was touching them inappropriately and poured a beer on one of them, police said.

"He grabbed one girl from behind," State College Police Capt. Dana Leonard said. "She fell down, and he poured a beer on her."

Police did not release the man's name. Because the investigation is ongoing, police did not See ASSAULT, Page 2.

Bolden looks to fill QB spot

In between high school classes, track practices and working out, Robert Bolden is trying to prepare for his future.

Despite living nearly seven hours away from State College and being unable to enroll early because of Catholic League rules, the four-star quarterback and Penn State recruit said he's still upbeat about fighting for the Nittany Lions' starting job. Because he won't step on campus until mid-May — something Bolden said he wishes he could've done in January — all he can do this spring is wait and learn.

"If I go in [to camp] and don't know anything and kind of show them that I have a lot of catching up to do, then I'll probably See BOLDEN, Page 2.

Actors Russell Brand and Jonah Hill walked into a movie theater filled with Penn State students, and shouted two words: "We Are."

Brand was surprised after being met with an enthusiastic reply of "Penn State."

"I could have done with more rehearsal time for that 'we are,'" he said.

Brand and Hill greeted the crowd of students at Premiere Theatre 12, 125 Premiere Drive, on Monday night after a free screening of their new film "Get Him to the Greek," which officially opens in theaters June 4.

The actors engaged in a question-and-answer session with the audience for about 30 minutes after the film, and the topics discussed ranged from Brand's battle with drug addiction to Hill's time working for a cardboard box factory when he was 18.

The audience, which laughed loudly throughout the almost two-hour film, was curious about the actors' favorite scenes to See MOVIE, Page 2.
