catch a squirrel.
Abercrombie said he's looking forward to seeing "SPAMALOT" when it comes to Penn State.
The group plans to go together, he said — the musical has been "highly recommended" to him by others.
Bowman is also excited about "SPA-MALOT" stopping in Happy Valley, the third stop on its nine-month tour.
"I've made it very clear to my cast members about how much Penn State pride I have," Bowman said. "I miss it a lot."
Bowman said she was excited to see her former professors and to bring her work to Penn State. Though her time in Happy Valley will be limited, Bowman said she has plans to take her new cast members to the Berkey Creamery and for a walk around campus.

State theatre students to "soak up every ounce of training" they get at school.
"It has really prepared me for this,"
she said. "Penn State eased me into it.
I knew exactly what I was getting into."
Bowman said the theater is not exempt from the state of the economy, but her story definitely proves that it's possible to succeed in it just out of college.
"It's just a matter of determination,"
she said.
Theater students, Bowman said, should trust their craft and "of course
... audition, audition, audition."
