Bowl games lack importance, quality

By Brendan Monahan

V ifting through TV channels over Christmas break, the uDrove Humanitarian Bowl might pop up. Taking place at Bronco Stadium in Boise, Idaho, a team from the MAC will face one from the WAC on Dec. 18, the first day of bowl games.

the next station.

No one blames you. Most bowl games lack quality matchups, and other more interesting sporting events will be broadcast over the airwaves.

MY OPINION

Outside of the BCS contests and several others - including the Capital One Bowl postseason FBS games fade out of memory.

This season, Penn State's bowl could present the same dilemma.

Whichever game the Nittany Lions go to, a win could help reverse the trend of losing to ranked teams, and the young players could gain confidence heading into the spring.

The extra practices leading into postseason matchups can also help a team improve

Bowls are in no way pointless for players

But from a fan's standpoint — outside of ranked matchups and BCS games — the postseason contests provide no real value. And from the perspective of pure sporting purpose, the only real game that matters is the Tostitos BCS National Championship Game, which crowns a champion.

There are 35 bowls, meaning 70 of 120 Football Bowl Subdivision teams will play in bowl games — that's approximately 58 percent of the league playing in the postseason.

Could you imagine that percentage of NFL teams playing after the regular season?

That means about 18 teams — six more than the league's current format - would make the playoffs.

Could you fathom the MLB with the same percentage?

Currently eight clubs, four from each league, get into the postseason. If the MLB applied the same format as the FBS. approximately 17 teams would make the playoffs.

Not even college basketball, which now features a playoff of 68 schools, has that disproportional of a postseason.

In fact, Division I basketball has a lower percentage than all of the above. With 347 schools playing Division I basketball, about 19 percent of teams make the NCAA tournament.

Putting the bowl system into perspective, its importance shrinks and shrivels into irrelevance.

The Outback and Gator Bowls would be enticing for Penn State. Playing a team from the nation's best conference, the SEC, brings attention to the game, especially if featuring 2008 national champion Florida or Steve Spurrier's South Carolina, but there are no stakes on the game, no titles to be won.

Pride really wouldn't even be a factor. To an outsider, the bowl game is fun to watch, yes. But it's more of a way to pass the time during the holiday season.

The Insight, Citor and Outback Bowls are filler games enticements before the real shows, such as the Granddaddy of Them All — otherwise known as the Rose Bowl - or the Sugar Bowl.

So while flipping around the TV on New Year's Day, you'll probably come across Penn State. This time, unlike for the uDrove Humanitarian Bowl, you'll probably keep it on.

The game beats one at Bronco Stadium in Boise. Idaho.

It beats a matchup between MAC and WAC schools, but like the percentage of postseason FBS contenders, the bowl just won't add up.
