DOWN WITH THE SPEED FIENDS

"There are nice streets, big wide, smooth, long, straight streets in Indiana. When we get there we'll hit up the speed a bit and enjoy some real fast driving." This is a remark frequently heard from autoists driving toward Indiana.

Indiana has good streets. The borough paid for them. They were built for the convenience of our townfolk.

Outsiders are making these streets speedways.

They are endangering the lives of pedestrians.

Visitors in town often remark that it is strange that speeding is allowed on the main thoroughfare of a town so large and so progressive as Indiana.

Our townfolk only gasp. They, too, wonder why strange auto drivers are permitted to break all reasonable speed limits inside the borough.

There is a speed limit here—15 miles is the law.

We are not not blaming the police officers for the conditions which exist.

Arrests follow violations of the speed limit.

But the PATRIOT takes this stand:

Fifteen miles as a limit is not exactly what Indiana needs. That speed is too great. There should be a limit of from eight to 10 miles. That's fast enough driving through the streets of the town.

The PATRIOT urges the establishing of an ordinance that will make the exceeding of an eight or ten mile limit punishable.

This would put a stop to the speed menace. It would cause our streets to become an advantage instead of a detriment.

Council can do this. It will require only a little effort.

Land Bert ichteberger, sentiment of the people of this town when we say that we need a speed limit worse than we needed the paved streets.

Other towns are establishing speed limits—real speed limits—and enforcing them.

Why can't Indiana?
