HUERTA'S RETURN UPSETS MEXICANS

All Factions Keep Close Eye on Former Dictator.

DECLARE HE IS POWERLESS

But Firmly Believe That "Personal and Family Business," the Reason He Gives For Coming Back to America From Spain, Foreshadows Attempt to Regain Authority in Mexico.

When General Victoriano Huerta, the expelled dictator of Mexico, landed at New York he denied that he had come from his refuge at Spain to seek to regain his former power. He had come merely on personal and family business, he said.

All the same, many of his friends seem firmly to believe that he is back for the purpose of re-entering the imbrolio in Mexico to try to re-establish himself now that he is sure Carranza has lost the backing of the United States and has failed. But if that is his intention Huerta had not been long in New York city before he found himself completely cut off from affiliation with any of the four most important political organizations in Mexico—the Villistas, Carranzistas, Felicistas and the Clericals.

"There is no chance for him to re-establish himself in Mexico," say Carlo de Fornaro, Carranza adviser and chief publicity agent, and Colonel Alfredo Breceda, General Carranza's private secretary, who is in Washington on a diplomatic mission.

"If he goes into Mexico and Villa catches him the same thing will happen to him that happened to Licencio Bonales Sandoval—Villa will shoot him," declared a prominent Villista.

Has Alienated Strong Men.

"He has alienated himself from every 'strong man' in Mexico," said the most important member of the Felicista party now in New York city.

While all Mexican political factions agreed that General Huerta could not start a revolutionary movement in Mexico that would assume any importance, they were all, with the exception of the partisans of General Felix Diaz, uneasy about his presence in America. Detectives were set to watch the one time dictator in the interest of the Carranzistas, the Villistas and the Felicistas.

Only the Clericals seemed to take little interest in General Huerta's presence.

Carlo de Fornaro said no one knew positively what General Huerta's "personal and family business" here might prove to be, and there were many who thought such a term might very well cover an attempt to regain the presidency of Mexico, since that was a very "personal and family" affair for Huerta.

Agents for the department of justice were also sent to the Hotel Ansonia, where General Huerta is staying in New York with his companions, Abraham Z. Ratner and Colonel Jose Delgado, the deposed dictator's secretary. The general paid little heed to these attentions. Whenever he passed the men on his way to go for an automobile drive about the city he smiled at them genially.

Diaz "Not Interested."

General Felix Diaz happens also to be in New York, but did not appear to be worried by Huerta's arrival.

"He is not at all interested in General Huerta or what General Huerta can do," said one of General Diaz's important men. "He knows that the one time dictator can do nothing. He has alienated himself from every man who could help him. Nobody will have anything to do with Huerta now. There is no man of importance in Mexico who would affiliate with any Huerta movement."

"General Huerta came here in answer to an appeal from a certain henequin grower of Yucatan," Carlo de Fornaro asserts. "He was asked to head the Auguemedo revolt and was on his way to Yucatan. When he arrived in New York city he found that the revolt had been quelled.

"The scheme was to buy munitions in the United States, purchase a yacht or a small schooner and make a landing at Belize or somewhere along the coast of Guatemala. They hoped to gather an army sufficiently strong to break the Carranza power in Yucatan, Campeche and Quintana Roo and to form a small republic of those three states with Huerta at its head."

Friends of Villa admit that they regard the Huerta trip to the United States as menacing, so far as Mexico was concerned, but say they hoped that he would go into Mexico for the

THIEF TOOK COAT AND FEVER

Police Watch Health Reports to Find the Criminal. A good mackintosh and a million more or less, full sized scarlet fever germs was the extent of booty obtained by a sneak thief who entered the home of Dr. Preston Steele of Greenville, Pa., and took the coat from a bag hanging on the back porch. The garment was used by the physician exclusively in entering the sick rooms of patients suffering from scarlet fever. The police are watching the board of health's reports.

CROWN PRINCE IS RUMOR'S VICTIM.

He's Been Dead, Disgraced and Insane Several Times.

EVERYTHING BEFALLS HIM.

But After Being Buried Twice Kaiser's Heir is Still Very Much Alive Back at Front From Cheering Princess Cecile in Berlin on the Birth of Their Fifth Child.

If the Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm has kept a diary of the various things that have "happened" to him since the war began parts of it must be amusing reading to him.

As gathered from the dispatches his diary must run something like this:

Aug. 1.—Appointed to the command of the First division of the Imperial guards.

Aug. 5.—Attempt made to assassinate him in Berlin. Assailant both succeeded and failed in his attempt.

Aug. 19.—Seriously wounded in battle; taken to a hospital in Aix-le-Chapelle.

Aug. 20.—Shot in the leg in Berlin when a second attempt is made to assassinate him.

Aug. 24.—Because of his growing popularity with army and nation he is expelled to the Russian front for the remainder of the war.

Aug. 24.—Leads his army in the defeat of the French at Longwy.

Aug. 25.—Killed by a mysterious attack. "It is thought by frenzied Germans."

Aug. 26.—Decorated by the kaiser with the iron cross and becomes internationally famous by the "Papa Wilhelm" letter of commendation for his work as a soldier.

He Commits Suicide.

Sept. 4.—Commits suicide after men of his command fire on and kill a large number of men in a German detachment.

Sept. 8.—Leads the Imperial guard on the western part of the French front when the Germans meet defeat at the hands of the British.

Sept. 11.—Appointed to the command of the German army on the eastern battle front to drive the Russians from East Prussia.

Sept. 12.—Leads his army in a furious assault on the defenses of Verdun in France.

Sept. 13.—Dies from his wounds in a Brussels hospital. His brother Adalbert dies in the same hospital.

Sept. 14.—Directs his army when it opposes a strong attack by the French in the Argonne.

Sept. 15.—Leads another attack on the outer fortifications of Verdun.

Sept. 16.—Dangerously wounded in East Prussia by Russian shrapnel while he is watching the battle.

Sept. 28.—His army loses 100,000 men in France.

Sept. 28.—"Authoritative report" that he had been seriously wounded in action on Sept. 6.

Sept. 30.—Looted the chateau in the Argonne belonging to the Baronne de Boye.

Is Twice Buried.

Oct. 2.—Dangerously wounded in a battle near Nancy and the crown princess and her children hurry to the front to be with him.

Oct. 11.—Meets the crown princess in Luxembourg, whither she has gone to confer decorations.

Oct. 24.—Berlin mourns at his funeral.

Nov. 2.—His funeral procession again passes through the streets of Berlin.

Nov. 4.—Killed in a battle near the Franco-German border.

Nov. 6.—Worry of the campaign has brought on insanity and he is sent to one of the royal family's remote estates.

Nov. 11.—Commands the German center army in an advance against the Russians.

Nov. 12.—Appointed commander in chief of the allied German-Austrian armies operating against the Russians.

Nov. 17.—He is lying seriously wounded in the Strassburg palace.

Dec. 1.—Receives an American newspaper man at his field headquarters in France and talks of the war.

Jan. 10.—Crown princess accompanies him from Berlin to the front.

Retired in Disgrace.

Jan. 16.—Identified as the masked patient of royal rank who is lying in a critical condition in a small German base hospital.

Jan. 30.—Sends a formal message to the United States asking for fair play for Germany.

Feb. 9.—Appointed to command the Fifth German army on the western front.

March 3.—Removed from command in disgrace and retired to a secluded family estate.

March 19.—Killed after a quarrel by a member of his suit.

March 19.—Takes part in a war conference attended by the kaiser and the German general staff.

March 25.—Suffering from a nervous breakdown in a private nursing home near Potsdam.

March 29.—Leaves the front for a stay with the crown princess in Berlin.

April 7.—The Crown Princess Cecile presents heir to throne with their fifth child, their first daughter. Prince hurries to Berlin.

April 12.—Crown princess sends husband back to war and congratulations of his army.

AMBASSADORS SUMMONED

Italy Recalls Representatives From Paris, London and Vienna.

Rome, April 28.—The government has summoned the Italian ambassadors at Paris, London and Vienna to Rome to confer with Foreign Minister Sonnino. The announcement of this fact is regarded with the greatest apprehensions. Signor Tittoni, ambassador to France, who arrived at Paris only a fortnight ago, has already reached Rome.

The ambassador to Petrograd, Marchese Carliotti, will not return owing to the great distance and the difficulty of travel, but a messenger has been sent to him with instructions. The ambassadors to London and Vienna are expected at any moment.

The German and Austrian ambassadors to Rome, according to reports in diplomatic circles, have united in sending copies of Italy's latest demands to Vienna with a statement that an answer is required immediately. The nature of the newest conditions upon which Italy is willing to remain neutral is not known as yet.

Too Deep For Him.

A Britisher was announcing his views on things in general and summed up in one position by the statement, "Well, I've seen life." "But," said his American friend, "one of your own bright poets has said, 'Life's a joke.'" The Britisher is still exploring the remark.—New York Times.

QUEER LEGACIES TO MAN.

Such as the Furrow in the Upper Lip and the Appendix.

Run your forefinger around the rim of each ear. You are almost sure to find in one of them and quite possibly in both a tiny hard lump.

It is only a relic of the days when, innumerable hundreds of centuries ago, man was only one of the animals of the wild and had a pointed ear, like a wolf's or dog's.

What good is the little furrow that runs down from the nose to the middle of the upper lip? None. But it, too, has a history. It is a legacy from the time when the human upper lip was in two parts—a bare lip, like that of the rat tribe. The split has healed up long ago, but the new skin is so recent in the history of the race that hair refuses to grow on that furrow.

When a fly settles on you anywhere can you serenely twitch that patch of skin and shake him off? Probably not. But once these old skin muscles, now almost dead after centuries of clothes wearing, were as active as those of a horse. A few—a very few—people can twitch their ears like a dog and do so instinctively when startled, and cases do occasionally occur in which the scalp can be moved at will.

In one very interesting case mentioned in medical books the man could hurl books a couple of yards away simply by twitching the muscles on the top of his head; but, generally speaking, our skin muscles are even more dead nowadays than our ear muscles. We've neglected them. The only set still in use are those we employ when we want to raise our eyebrows.

The appendix is another thing we could do quite well without. It is a relic from old vegetarian days. It has been workless ever since mankind started meat eating and is apt to get in the way.

The large intestine, too, is a thing we really don't need nowadays. The many coils of this long tube are, according to the doctors, quite unnecessary, now mankind has become a flesh eating animal, and merely provide a resting place for germs. Surgeons have often cut out a few odd coils and stitched the ends together. We don't really need to carry a great intestine about with us.

Another thing we don't need much nowadays is the instinct to walk on hands and feet together. You think walking upright the only natural way for man? It isn't. If ever you have to make your way along some narrow plank or some narrow, dizzy mountain ledge, you will find the old instinct strong in you.—Philadelphia North American.
