Facts Versus Fallacies

FACT is a real state of things. FALLACY is an apparently genuine but really illogical statement or argument.

PROHIBITIONISTS have been circulating the FALLACY in newspapers that because 7 minor States were placed under "dry" laws this year, it was evident public sentiment upholds that idea. A few FACTS, however, tabulated from Census data by that well-known writer, Mr. Clinton Wunder, should suffice to disabuse the minds of those imposed upon:

IN the 1914 vote on State-wide Prohibition the total 'dry' majority in the States of Arizona, Colorado, Oregon, Virginia and Washington was 100,203. Meantime the 'wet' majority in the States of California, Ohio and Texas was 273,757. Thus, the majority of votes against Prohibition in the three States that refused the proposition in 1914 was more than twice as large as the majority of votes for the proposition in the five States that adopted Prohibition.

THE 16 States that have tried Prohibition within the past 65 years and returned to the license system have a combined population of 38,632,302. Add Texas and California, which rejected Prohibition, and the combined population that has repudiated the impractical idea is 45,058,304. The 19 States that are either now under Prohibition laws, or which so declared themselves, have a combined population of 27,344,013.

IF the States are taken as a whole, as Prohibitionists do in claiming territory and population living under Prohibition law, whether the people like it or not, nearly twice as many States have tried and rejected the imposition as those that are now trying it, and the growth of the idea is backward as well as forward.

IN the 19 States that voted "dry" the total population was 27,344,013, while the total population of those States that voted to remain "wet" was 64,628,253.

THE Prohibitionist's FALLACY is thus met by the FACT that there are almost three times as many people in the United States living in "wet" territory as there are in "dry" territory!
