Facts Versus Fallacies

FACT is a real state of things. FALLACY is an apparently genuine but really illogical statement or argument.

FACTS reflected from news in the daily press are proving most embarrassing to Prohibition FALLACIES. For instance, where a dispatch from San Francisco, Cal., states that exactly 18,756,148 persons passed the turnstiles at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and of this great number only 83 were arrested or ejected for intemperate use of alcoholic beverages. Practically perfect order prevailed during the ten months of the great exhibition.

THIS temperance record of the Exposition, at which drinks of every kind were easily obtainable, seems more remarkable when comparison is made with the arrest records of several conspicuous Prohibition cities in which the sale of liquors is forbidden. The daily transient population at the Exposition, for example, was about 60,000, nearly equal to the resident population of Portland, the largest city in the oldest Prohibition State—Maine. Comparison gives the following official figures of arrests for drunkenness and disorderly conduct within a period of 10 months, viz.:

Total arrests at the Exposition for intoxication, 83
Arrests for intoxication in "Cry" Portland, Me., 3067

EVEN more striking comparison is that between the number of arrests for intoxication at the Exposition and the number jailed for the same offense in "Prohibition" Bangor, Maine. That city has only 26,000 population, less than half the daily attendance at the Exposition, and while there were only 83 arrests for intoxication during 10 months at the Exposition, 2639 persons were locked up for similar offenses in the city of Bangor.

WHEN the salient FACTS of officially-authenticated figures are brought into bold relief, the FALLACIES of Prohibitionists become all the more apparent.
