DOUBLES WITH OWN MOTHER

"They only do it in the movies," is the caustic comment of the high-brow, when a screen actress is forced by the exigencies of the script and the agencies of "double exposure" to play herself and her own mother in the same picture. Ella Hall has done plenty of dual characterizations in her time. Her last Bluebird picture, "Polly Redhead," was a film of this kind; but her next will show a departure from the usual thing. Her own really, truly mother will play the role of her screen parent, and even if you miss the introduction of the characters, you will know it at once, for there never was a stronger likeness between two women. Ella Hall is just her mother over again, only twenty years younger. In the next Bluebird photoplay in which Miss Hall is starred, and which is called "A Jewel in Pawn," Mrs. Hall plays the mother who leaves her little daughter as a pledge in a pawnshop. When she makes her first appearance on the screen the majority of the audience will think that she is Ella, playing a double role, and later they will imagine that they are looking at the most wonderful double exposure work ever taken for the films. As a matter of fact, the resemblance between the mother and daughter is unusually striking, and it adds great realism to a picture which is absolutely charming from the first scene to the last. Walter Belasco, a brother of the great producer, gives a lifelike portrayal of the old pawnbroker, and Antrim Short is excellent as the newsboy champion of Nora, the little girl played by Miss Hall.

PRECIOUS AS JEWELS.

"It might be a good idea to place a cordon of police around those vegetable stands," said P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal company, to the general manager of Universal City the other day, at the same time pointing to three stands filled with garden truck, all of which was being used in the street scene.

"Why the minions of the law?" asked the Universal City chief.

"Well, you know, automobiles are being offered for onions and potatoes nowadays and somebody might start a raid," replied the custodian of the Big U's strong box, with a merry little twinkle in his eye.
