

From the Washington Union.
The Next National Contest.

The first notes of preparation for the approaching contest are already sounding throughout the land, and ere long we shall be in the midst of a fierce political war. When once the battle is begun the avenues to the calm judgment of the people will be closed, and the excitement necessarily incident to the campaign will preclude all hopes of obtaining an impartial hearing. For these reasons we desire to address to the people of every section of the Union, a few calm and unimpassioned reflections, setting forth, in a clear and unprejudiced manner, the real nature of the contest into which we are about to enter, and the necessary consequences which are involved in it. We shall appeal to no passions, unless love for the Union be a passion. We shall attempt to arouse no prejudice, unless devotion to the constitution be a prejudice. We shall address ourselves neither to the abolitionists nor to those who use them as instruments for the furtherance of their own designs—the one neither reason nor listens to reason; the others know nothing sacred beyond themselves—but to the honest, intelligent, and independent citizens, who think for themselves, we address ourselves. We have ever cherished a strong and honest faith in the wisdom and integrity of the people; we have ever had great confidence in their "sober second thought." Upon this faith and confidence rest our hopes of the Union.

When the compromise measures were declared in the halls of Congress to be a finality, it was fondly hoped and believed by the great mass of the people that the slavery agitation was put to rest forever—that, removed from the halls of Congress, the slavery question would never again distract the country; but these anticipations have all proved vain. The acquiescence of an overwhelming majority of the people in these measures did not, as was expected, allay the spirit of fanaticism. The slavery question is not settled, but remains still the great all-absorbing question that is to enter into the next presidential election. But, if ever it is to be put to rest, it must be done in this contest. It is sufficiently evident that the power and influence of those men who have ever created the strifes which have been connected with this subject are much stronger now than at any time previous, and just in proportion as they have increased in strength, and their influence has been augmented, they have grown bolder and more insolent, until now they openly proclaim their intention to change the moral, social, and political condition of our government, and to effect a radical revolution in the very foundations of society. For this purpose they have attacked the Bible with the most daring blasphemy, because it does not sanction their crusade against the Union; they have united with socialism in undermining all the fundamental principles of humanity, upon which rest the decency and repose of society; they have denounced the constitution as a "rotten mchicken" nuisance; they have, to use their own words, "solicited correspondence, counsel, and assistance from all friends of the slave, whether at home or in Europe, and pledged themselves to employ most conscientiously whatever of influence or money may be committed to their hands, and to make faithful account for the same at the close of their undertaking." Truly as these revelations are astounding, and were the facts not daily brought to our notice, we might well doubt that American citizens could ever become so lost to reason or sink so low in the scale of humanity. Yet all this is said and done in the name of philanthropy! In the name of philanthropy they are ready to unite with a jealous or ambitious nation or nations to pull down and destroy the only government on the face of the earth where true philanthropy has a home. In the name of philanthropy they utter blasphemy, preach infidelity, and erect a system of religion, the only doctrine of which is abolition of slavery, and hurl the brand of excommunication against all who dare dissent.

We know that there are many well meaning persons who are accustomed to delude themselves into the belief that such things are but the work of a few crazy spinners and adle-pated fanatics, whose weakness renders them contemptible and harmless; while there are others who, acknowledging the evils attendant upon, and the dangers which must necessarily flow from the continuation of such things, are wont to console themselves and excuse their inactivity by the reflection that when things come to the worst, the good sense and patriotism of the people will step forward to preserve the Union. All such views, pleasant and convenient as they may be, are equally delusive and dangerous. No one who is at all conversant with the common events of the day but knows that abolitionists, either as such or as republicans, are daily holding convocations, making speeches, and passing resolutions in all the principal cities and towns throughout the North. It is true that in each separate community there may be a majority who would reject them, but it is also true that the indefatigable efforts of indefatigable zeal cannot fail to produce some effect upon the public mind, there are ambitious politicians in every locality ready to join with fanaticism itself to gratify their own aspirations. But not only have they strength at home, but abroad, in England and in France. English gold is daily and openly solicited to aid them; and when such a powerful weapon against their only commercial rival is to be had for gold, English gold will not be wanting. On the other hand, it seems to be overlooked that, when "the worst shall have come to the worst," that spirit of fraternal kindness and love in which our Union was founded, and which is necessary to its perpetuity, will have been destroyed, and all that renders the Union valuable or desirable will have been lost. Then the "sober second thought" of the people will come too late.

To have a correct view of the strength of the enemy with whom we are to contend, we have but to see the great champion of political abolitionism calling on all of whatever name or party, to the republican standard, and to observe the eagerness with which the summons is obeyed. It must be remembered that this new crusade against the constitution is led by men of profound intellects, prompted by the most unscrupulous ambition; while the more ignorant of their followers are urged on by the reckless, headlong energy of fanaticism. By the wily cunning of their leaders, what was once mere opinion has grown to be an imperative law of conscience, founded upon the belief in the existence of a "higher law" than the constitution. Actuated by such a spirit, experience tells us that there is no extravagance to which political zealots may not be led. We must remember, also, that the British press is teeming with this subject, and that British literature still has its millions of votaries in our country; that British anti-slavery societies are sending greetings, and, we doubt not, gold, to their brethren in America. These things assure us, that now, as in times past, the abolitionists will rely upon British aid and influence.

We repeat our remark then, that the power of the abolitionists is greater now than ever it was before, and these developments render it equally apparent that their leaders are fully apprized of the vital nature of the next contest; that they are thoroughly convinced that their every hope of future success depends upon the result of the election in 1856; and that just in proportion as they are convinced of this fact will they exert themselves to the very utmost. Hence it is that we hear such loud professions of devotion to the Union, such hypocritical eulogies upon the constitution, and upon the blessings of both. They design to deceive; and we regret that these false professions have deceived many honest, unsuspecting men.

Such are the men and the doctrines which make up the black republican party. We have clearly shown, again and again, that the triumph of such a party, advocating such principles, would be the destruction of the constitution. When once that is trampled upon and broken, there is no one—not even the black republicans—so insane as to hope for a preservation of the Union. The constitution and the Union are inseparable—one cannot survive the other. We are no alarmist, neither is it our design to foster a disunion spirit. We only desire to warn the honest, patriotic and national men of all parties against the nature and designs, and the inevitable consequences which must attend the triumph of abolitionism. We believe there is an overwhelming majority of the American people to whom the Union is valuable beyond all price short of their own honor, who will never willingly consent to its destruction; yet all experience tells us that, unless the temperate and conservative men of every name are united, they may fail; that, unless they are organized and their forces concentrated, they may be beaten by a much less numerous but more united body. There is but one political organization that does or can defend the constitution and the Union from these fanatics—the national party. The place of every true friend of the constitution and the Union in the pending contest is in the democratic party.

From the Hollidaysburg Standard, Oct. 24.
Slave Rescue.

Both Hollidaysburg and Gaysport were thrown into an unusual excitement on Saturday morning last by the arrest and subsequent escape of a fugitive slave. The particulars of the whole affair are very contradictory; but, after diligent inquiry, we think we have got them nearly correct, and will give them in such a form as to leave the reader to make his own comments.

It appears that last August a slave named Jacob Green, belonging to a Mr. Parsons, residing in Romney, Hampshire county, Virginia, ran away. No effort was made to retake him at the time. In a few weeks after he returned, under cover of night, stole a horse, and carried off five of Mr. Parsons' slaves. Two weeks ago he again returned, and carried off five slaves from the same place belonging to Mr. Stump. This induced Stump, Parsons, and a nephew of Mr. Parsons, to start in pursuit of them. In Bedford county two of Stump's slaves were overtaken, and sent back. From information received from the captured slaves, the party came to this place, and the elder Parsons went to Johnstown. On Saturday morning the younger Parsons, having received information that Green was in town, and likely to leave in the morning train, posted himself in Gaysport, and got upon the car with the intention of arresting him at Altoona. The cars had proceeded half way to the bluff when Green discovered Parsons, and immediately ran out and jumped off, notwithstanding the cars were moving rapidly. Parsons followed, and a chase down the turnpike ensued, which resulted in driving the negro into the house of Eli Yoder, where Parsons captured him. From thence he was taken to Kellerman's tavern, where it was found that he was armed with a revolver, every barrel of which was heavily loaded. This was secured by Mr. Parsons, and he related to the crowd what we have narrated in the beginning of this article, during which the negro called Parsons by name, and acknowledged that he had run away, but had not stole the horse. Presuming that this was satisfactory evidence, Parsons ordered his horse out, mounted the slave before him, and was about to depart, when Green slipped off and ran. Parsons followed him and caught him on the Rail Road, and attempted to bring him back. Quite a crowd had collected by this time, and Gen. Potts, the weighmaster in Gaysport, demanded his authority for arresting the negro. Parsons refused to show any authority, and declared that he was arresting him under the fugitive slave law. The excitement rose to a very high pitch. Parsons attempted to force the slave toward the tavern but he was grappled by Col. Piper, J. R. Crawford and Gen. Potts, who held him pinioned, while William Carr, the negro barber kicked him! During the melee, they forced the slave from Parsons, and Carr took him off. The release of the fugitive effected, Potts went before a magistrate, and made oath against Parsons for attempting to kidnap. Parsons procured a ball, and telegraphed to his uncle; but he did not arrive in time to release his ball at the time specified, and a bail piece was taken out. Parsons was taken before Justice Cox, and entered new bail in the sum of $2,000. In the meantime, Jacob Green, the slave, is probably on his way to Canada, and Parsons is put to the trouble and expense of standing a law suit for endeavoring to arrest a slave—for such he was beyond doubt. His speedy exit from the cars, as well as his admission in Kellerman's proved it. The thing is not ended yet.

Let it once be known that we have nigger sympathizers in this place, who set the law before Congress at defiance, and are ready to aid captured fugitives in escaping, and we shall soon have a depot and branch of the underground rail road, in our town. We shall have more to say on this subject in our next.

There is a good orchard on it; a well of water at the house and one at the barn. It is situate within one mile of the station on the Pennsylvania Railroad at Spruce Creek, and is one of the best wheat farms in the county. If not sold at private sale before the 26th November next, it will on that day be exposed to public sale on the premises.

The property will be shown, and terms made known at any time on application to David Henderson of Franklin township.

FALL AND WINTER GOODS. Call and Look before you Purchase.

GEO. GWIN,

HAS just returned from Philadelphia and is now opening one of the prettiest and best selected stock of goods ever brought to the borough of Huntingdon. It would be useless to mention all of the goods we have on hand—

- LADIES' DRESS GOODS, of the latest styles.
- A large stock of Hosiery, Dress Trimmings, Ribbons, Velvet, Bonnets, Underclothes, Collars, Spencers, Cassimers, Cloths, Vestings, Lace, Silk Mitts, Delaines, De Berge, Kid Gloves, and all kinds of goods generally kept in a country store.
- Also—a fine assortment of BOOTS & SHOES, HATS & CAPS, Glassware, Queensware and Cedarware. A large and good supply of Fresh Groceries.
- Call and see my goods and examine for yourselves.
- Thankful for the patronage of the past by my friends, and the public generally, I respectfully solicit a continuance of the same.
- All kinds of country produce taken in exchange for goods at highest market price.
