

The Know-Nothings and the Organ-Grinders in Germany.

American tourists will recollect to have frequently been attracted at the fairs and markets in Germany by a not always very melodious concert, performed by an organ-grinder, and accompanied, usually by his heart-rendering song. From time to time he will, at certain places in his song, point with a long stick at a gaudily-painted picture, which is put up at a wall, corner of a house, &c., and represents to the eye the scenes the meaning of which his voice and barrel-organ tries to impress upon the ears of his audience, commonly consisting, in the greater portion, of country people. If there has been committed any great and hideous crime, as murder, poisoning, &c., you may be sure that these devotees of both Orpheus and Apollo will be ready at the next country fair to exhibit their pictures, appropriate songs, and descriptions of the horrible deeds, in the above-mentioned manner. They will sell you at the same time "das Lied und die Beschreibung" (song and description) for one silbergroschen, which the country people will take home to read during the long winter evenings to their families and servants, as a warning example to beware of such acts of depravity.

Now, it is less amusing than grievous to learn that the heroism of the know-nothings at Louisville has found by these German Homers a similar acknowledgement. On their pictures you will perceive how a dozen or more "Americans" attack one poor, unoffending German, or how they are chasing through the streets some two or three Irishmen; further, you will see painted in glaring colors how they burn the houses and drive women and children back into the flames, to find a miserable and most cruel grave under the smouldering and scorching ruins of their hard-earned property. The organ-grinder will tell you, in the intervals of his performance, that all this has been done in the freest country on earth, without legal punishment—even without reprimand from the authorities. The country people and others, standing around the picture, will eagerly buy the "Louisville Lied und Beschreibung," and go shuddering home, blessing themselves to be not in that "civilized" country, where men, women, and children are burnt alive, and pitying those who are there.

Will not history—the just and grave judge of mankind—censure such acts with the severity they deserve? The good character and reputation of the American nation would have been sustained if, instead of their foul deeds being sanctioned by the law, the Louisville rioters had been brought before the bar of justice. The present generation may, for its political opinions, be silent; but the next one will and must condemn. Have we not reason to be ashamed in reading such things as above given? May they be insignificant in their origin; their consequences are not! The public opinion of other civilized nations will be against us. Of course, the European Kings, who always have watched with jealousy the immense exodus of valuable producing power and capital, will welcome such acts. The consequences, in this country, are immediate, and already visible. The immigration of this year will fall short of about 200,000 against that of the preceding year. If we presume that they brought with them per head only thirty dollars, (which is the very lowest rate), our country has lost in one year six millions of dollars in specie; and if we value the producing power of each head at only fifty dollars, our loss will amount to ten millions more. But the know-nothings do not or will not know anything about these facts, until they will perceive in their own pockets the material loss of the laboring immigrant. The West and all the new States will feel it the most. The immigrants who cultivated the wilderness benefited not only themselves, but also their American neighbors.—Washington Union.

From the Hollidaysburg Standard, Oct. 31. THE SLAVE RESCUE.
By the Court proceedings to-day, it will be seen that James Parsons, jr., for legally arresting a slave, belonging to his uncle, has had a true bill presented against him by the Grand Inquest of Blair county! Of course the jury is not to blame in the matter, even if they were governed by the evidence of the prosecutor, and not by that of the negro whom it is alleged was about to be kidnapped. Mr. Parsons gave the required security and left for home.
As was to be expected, those "friends of humanity," the editors of the Register and the Whig, take strong grounds in favor of the negro and against Parsons. The Whig even goes so far as to call him a kidnapper, in the absence of any proof.
If Parsons was a kidnapper would any man for a moment suppose that he would attempt to carry off a free negro in broad daylight? We think not. Kidnapping is a dangerous profession and we never heard of it being carried on only under cover of night, even before Abolitionism became mixed up in the politics of the country.
If Parsons was a kidnapper how does it come that the negro Green recognized him in the ears and immediately jumped out and endeavored to escape?
If Parsons was a kidnapper how does it come that Green acknowledged, in presence of a dozen persons, in Kellerman's tavern, that he had ran away?
If Parsons was a kidnapper why did the negroes and their sympathizers in Gaysport carry Green off? Surely Green had nothing to fear if he was not the lawful property of Parsons, and by establishing his freedom, he could have aided at once in convicting Parsons of an attempt to kidnap.
There is no doubt at all but that Green was the property of Parsons, Sr., and his arrest was strictly in accordance with the Fugitive Slave Law. Young Parsons may have acted imprudently, during the excitement, in not satisfying the negro sympathizers that he had a legal right to the slave. But if one person has the right to compel a man, in the execution of the law, to show his authority, we do not see why every citizen in the State has not the same right; a right that would render the fugitive slave act null and void.
Mr. Parsons declares his intention forthwith to proceed against the persons who rescued his slave, in the U. S. District Court. We are satisfied that the slave was his property, and that his nephew was no more guilty of an attempt to kidnap than we were. The prosecution was a shallow pretext to rob him of his slave, and it succeeded. But he can and will have redress—our word for that.
CORRECTION.—Col. JOHN PIPER, of Gaysport, complains that we have done him great injustice by coupling his name with the slave rescue. We do not do so on what we conceived to be reliable information; but of course the reports of the affair were so contradictory that an error of the kind could scarcely be avoided. The Colonel says that when he reached the scene of excitement the negro had left, and all was over, except the discussion between Potts and Crawford and Parsons, and that had been present, during the melee, he would have urged the detention of the slave until such a time as the case was clearly made out. We would not knowingly place any man in a wrong position, and we cheerfully make the correction. We hope that the editors throughout the State, who have copied our article will make this correction.
