number of the London Times :

The Prayer of Washington.

While the American army lay encamped in a deplorable state of nakedness and starvation at Valley Forge, a Quaker named Potts, passing a secluded spot, heard the voice of some one in prayer. Stealing quietly forward, he saw Washington's horse tied to a sapling, and a little further on, in a thicket, was the chief on his knees, tears streaming down his checks, beseeching Heaven for the army and his coun-vines And marmuring brooklets wander through the pines,

All is rude and wild :

Where leaps from tree to tree The graceful squirrel-where the wild bird and awful touch that the animals for sings Farewell to autumn, on departed wings, And hums the busy bee: There, where no voice is heard, screen, By their light wings is stirred; There, low on bended knee, His broad brow lifted to the arching sky With folded hands, and meek, imploring eye, He prays, O. God ! to thee; "Father!" his heart is sad For those poor sufferers yonder in the camp;

Disease is there; their huts are cold and damp; They ask in vain for bread. "Father!" in years agone, A Christian mother taught those lips to pray,

And yet he hears, though youth hath passed away, That gentle teacher's tone. "Father!" what can he do?

Those hearts, unfinching 'mid the battle's storm, Shrink back, appalled at famine's haggard form; How can THE STARVED be true? Long shadows drape the hill ; His voice alone goes trembling o'er the bush, Which slowly settles o'er plain and hush, Till day's glad pulse is still. How can he let Thee go? As Jacob, wrestled with his Lord, of old, With breaking heart, yet faith's unbroken hold, He wrestles with Thee now. How beautiful is faith ;

He on whose wisdom leaned a nation's heart, With child-like trust repeats, "Oh, God, thou

Gov. Denver, of Kansas.

A Kansas correspondent of the St. Louis Republican says of this gentleman:

"Gov. Denver has so deported him self in his executive and individual capacity that a large majority of the free State men have become his sincere admirers and steadfast friends; and Lane promptly met and summarily crushed
